GOVERNMENT OF INDIA.

LEGISLATIVE DEPARTMENT.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE INDIAN LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL ASSEMBLED UNDER THE PROVISIONS OF THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA ACT, 1915.
(5 & 6 Geo. V, Ch. 81.)

The Council met at the Council Chamber, Imperial Secretariat, Delhi, on Friday, the 7th March, 1919.

PRESENT :

The Hon'ble SIR GEORGE LOWNDES, K.C.S.I., K.C., Vice-President, presiding, and 54 Members, of whom 48 were Additional Members.

STATEMENT LAID ON THE TABLE.

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"Sir, I lay on the table a statement regarding the appointment of Advisory Committees to examine the cases of persons who have been interned under the Defence of India Act and Regulation III of 1918; the statement has been prepared with reference to the question* put by the Hon'ble Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjea at the meeting of the Indian Legislative Council held on the 10th September, 1918."

11 A.M.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma asked :—

1. "Will Government be pleased to state whether any, and if so, what orders have been passed by the Secretary of State for India with regard to the future management of the East Indian Railway?"

The East Indian Railway.

The Hon'ble Sir Arthur Anderson replied :—

"The Secretary of State has decided to extend the contract with the East Indian Railway Company for a period of five years at much lower remuneration to the Company than at present, and has indicated his intention of terminating the contract on the 31st December, 1924. He has agreed that, thereafter, direction shall be transferred to India either under State or efficient Company management. He also proposes that, as soon as convenient after the termination of the war, an inquiry shall be instituted into the desirability or otherwise, on financial and administrative grounds, of modifying the present management of Indian State-owned railways either by substitution of management by Companies domiciled in India, or by extension of one or other of the existing systems. The proposed inquiry need not, however, delay transfer of the East Indian Railway beyond the end of 1924."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma :—" May I ask, Sir, as to what the proposed reduction in the profits would be ? "

The Hon'ble Sir Arthur Anderson :—" I am unable to answer that at present."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma asked :—

Liquor and drug shops.

2. " What is the number of villages and towns in which (a) liquor shops and (b) drug shops have been opened for the first time during the year 1917-18 ? "

The Hon'ble Sir Thomas Holland replied :—

" Figures are not available to show the number of villages and towns in which shops were opened for the first time ; but altogether 251 new liquor shops and 76 new drug shops were opened during the year 1917-18. In many cases, however, the opening of a new shop merely means a change of location. The Hon'ble Member would probably also like to know that 1,694 liquor shops and 193 drug shops were closed during the same period."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma :—" May I request, Sir, that the question may be considered as to whether it would not be desirable to compile statistics for the purpose of knowing in what new villages shops were opened ? "

The Hon'ble Sir Thomas Holland :—" I will give attention to the Hon'ble Member's request."

The Hon'ble Sir Fazulbhoy Currimbhoy asked :—

Termination
with the East Indian Railway Company.

3. " Will Government be pleased to lay on the table all papers in regard to the forthcoming termination of the contract with the East Indian Railway Company ? "

The Hon'ble Sir Arthur Anderson replied :—

" The Hon'ble Member's attention is invited to the reply to the question by the Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma.

The details of the temporary arrangements therein referred to are still incomplete, and the papers cannot yet be laid on the table."

The Hon'ble Sir Fazulbhoy Currimbhoy asked :—

Aerial mail service between India and the United Kingdom.

4. " What arrangements are in progress in regard to an aerial mail service between India and the United Kingdom ? "

His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief replied :—

"The Government of India are not yet in a position to make any statement on the subject. The matter is being discussed with the various Departments concerned in India, and I hope to be able to answer the Hon'ble Member's inquiry at a later date."

[7TH MARCH, 1919.] [Sir Fazulbhoy Currimbhoy ; Sir William Vincent ; Sir James Meston ; His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief.]

The Hon'ble Sir Fazulbhoy Currimbhoy asked :—

5. “(a) What steps have been taken for the representation of Indian Commerce in the Imperial War Cabinet ? Representation of Indian Commerce in the Imperial War Cabinet.
(b) Will Government lay on the table all correspondence with the Secretary of State in this connection ?”

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent replied :—

“The Government of India received a telegram from the Indian Merchants' Chamber and Bureau, Bombay, at the end of November last, suggesting that a representative of the Indian Commercial community should be given a seat in the War Cabinet. But there has never been any question of giving representation in the War Cabinet to special interests as apart from the general interests of India, and the suggestion was not pursued.”

The Hon'ble Sir Fazulbhoy Currimbhoy asked :—

6. “What is the total investment in English, Colonial and Indian securities, respectively, from (1) the Gold Reserve and (2) the Paper Currency Reserve ?” Investment from the Gold Reserve and Paper Currency Reserve.

The Hon'ble Sir James Meston replied :—

“A statement * giving the information required is laid on the table.”

The Hon'ble Sir Fazulbhoy Currimbhoy asked :—

7. “(a) Has the question of the employment of men from Territorial and other units of the Army on demobilisation, and in some cases before demobilisation, been considered ? Employment of men from Territorials and other units on demobilization.
(b) If so, will Government lay on the table all papers in connection with such employment ?”

His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief replied :—

“ (a) The reply to question (a) is in the affirmative, and I welcome this opportunity of giving further publicity to what is being done.

The question of the employment of men of Territorial and other units of the Army on demobilization, and in some cases before demobilization, has been under consideration—

(i) as to how those desirous of obtaining employment may be put in touch with suitable employers,

(ii) as to how those obtaining either definite or provisional promises of employment may be suitably released pending general demobilization.

Suitable registration forms have been drafted for the use of officers and men, British and Indian, who are skilled workers, artisans or clerks, which may be filled up by those desirous of assistance in obtaining employment. These applications are being dealt with by the Central Employment and Labour Board which, through Provincial organizations, is in touch with employers of labour throughout India.

The question of release pending demobilization is being dealt with by the Army Department in co-operation with the Central Employment and Labour Board.

Instructions have issued that all men of Indian units, who are leaving the army and who desire civil employment shall be furnished with a copy of India Army Form Y.-1962, a copy of which is sent to the Recruiting Officer concerned, who is charged with the duty of assisting such men to find suitable employment.

[7TH MARCH, 1919.]

An Indian Soldiers Board, with the Hon'ble Sir George Lowndes as President, has been constituted and is in communication with Local Governments in regard to the various matters with which it has to deal.

This Board will advise on all questions affecting the interests of serving and discharged Indian soldiers and non-combatants and will deal particularly with—

- (i) the question of preferential treatment in obtaining Government employment ;
- (ii) the consideration, in collaboration with the Military authorities, of the whole subject of demobilization in its civil aspect, in relation to prevailing conditions and the general interest.

Information is being furnished in advance to Provincial Indian Soldiers Boards of the number of Indian soldiers returning to each district in the Province, so that they may receive every possible assistance.

(b) The following papers relating to the subject are placed on the table* :—

- (i) I. A. F. Y.-1962.
- (ii) Registration form for skilled workers, artizans and clerks employed overseas, who desire assistance in obtaining employment in India.
- (iii) Non-military employment form (India). For other than Commissioned Officers, who desire assistance in obtaining appointments in civil life after release from employment under the Military Department.
- (iv) I. A. O. No. 1014 of 3rd December, 1918. Re-employment of Officers and others in civil life.
- (v) I. A. O. No. 2-S. of 4th January, 1919. Re-employment of Officers and others in civil life.
- (vi) Government of India Resolution No. 1778.
- (vii) Indian Soldiers Board letter No. 15 I. S. B. of 12th February 1919.
- (viii) Demobilization Instructions (British) No. 14."

The Hon'ble Nawab Saiyed Nawab Ali Chaudhuri, Khan Bahadur, asked :—

Appoint-
the Provincial Educational Servi-
Service.

8. "(a) With reference to the reply given on the 5th March, 1918, to my question relating to the appointment of members of the Provincial Educational Service to existing vacancies in the Indian Educational Service, will Government state what action, if any, has been taken on the proposals which were then being considered in consultation with the Local Governments ?

(b) Are Government aware of the fact that the people of India are anxiously looking forward to the pronouncement of Government on the reorganisation of the Educational Services as recommended by the Public Services Commission ?

(c) Is any action contemplated on the report of the Special Committee appointed by the Government of Bengal under the Presidentship of Nawab Sir Syed Shamsul Huda in this connection ? If so, from what date and in what way ?

(d) Are Government aware of the existence of widespread discontent among the Indian educated classes owing to a differentiation of the Educational Services on the basis of domicile apart from intrinsic merit or academic qualification ? If so, what steps are being or have been taken to allay such discontent ? "

The Hon'ble Sir C. Sankaran Nair replied :—

"(a) The Secretary of State has recently sanctioned the permanent promotion of 12 officers of the Provincial Educational Service to the Indian

* Not included in these Proceedings.

Educational Service, and the question of promoting more officers of the former service to the latter service is under consideration.

(b) and (d) The Government of India are aware that the reorganisation of the Educational Services is regarded as a matter of considerable interest by some sections of the community, and that there have been expressions of discontent by members of the Indian educated classes at the differentiation alluded to. The whole question of the reorganisation of the educational services, as recommended by the Public Services Commission, is still under the consideration of the Government of India, in the light of the replies of the Local Governments and Administrations to the published circular of the Government of India, No. 863, dated the 6th October, 1917, and it is expected that a despatch on the subject will shortly be addressed to the Secretary of State.

(c) The Government of Bengal have submitted the report with their recommendations to the Government of India, who are considering it along with the general question of the reorganisation of the Educational Services mentioned above."

The Hon'ble Nawab Saiyed Nawab Ali Chaudhuri, Khan Bahadur, asked :—

9. "(a) When will the construction work of the proposed Tangi-Tangail Singhjani (Jamalpur) Railway line be taken up?

(b) Are Government in a position to give an approximate date from which the line will be opened to passenger and goods traffic?

(c) Do Government contemplate extending the Rangia-Tangla Branch of the Eastern Bengal Railway to Tezporo? If so, when will the acquisition of land and construction work for the line be taken up?"

Construction of Tangi-Tangail Singhjani Railway line.

The Hon'ble Sir Arthur Anderson replied :—

"(a) The Tangi-Tangail-Singhjani (Jamalpur) Railway has been surveyed and the project is under consideration. Government are not in a position yet to indicate when the construction of the line will be undertaken.

(b) For the reasons given in (a) the reply to this is in the negative.

(c) Though Government appreciate the advantages to be derived by the district from an extension of the Rangiya-Tangla Branch, it is not possible for them to fix a date for its commencement, as there are other more urgent projects which must take precedence of it."

The Hon'ble Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjea asked :—

10. "(a) Will Government be pleased to state the composition and functions of the Committee sitting under the presidency of the Hon'ble Sir Verney Lovett to inquire into questions connected with the medical services?

Medical Services Committee.

(b) Will Government be pleased to explain the reasons for the appointment of the Committee?

(c) Has the attention of Government been called to the resolutions passed at the All-India Medical Conference which sat at Delhi under the presidency of the Hon'ble Sir Nilratan Sarkar?

(d) Will the Committee be invited to consider the questions relating to the growth of the independent medical profession in India?"

His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief replied :—

"(a) A statement * showing the composition of the Medical Services Committee is laid on the table.- The Committee has been appointed to examine and report on the reorganisation of the Medical Services in India, both civil and military.

(b) The Secretary of State has recently asked the Government of India to examine the question of the future organisation of the Medical Services in India to provide for military requirements. This necessitates a detailed and complete examination of the system by which the medical needs of India are to be met in future. As the case calls for early settlement, it was decided to refer the subject to a Committee representing the various interests involved.

(c) The reply is in the affirmative.

(d) No, the Committee is dealing only with the future organisation of the Government Medical Services."

The Hon'ble Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjea asked :—

Rise in
Dhotis.

11. "(a) Has the attention of Government been drawn to a statement which appeared in the Bharatmitra of the 13th February, 1919, giving the following particulars relating to the rise in the price of dhotis :—

(b) Do Government propose to consider the advisability of levying an export duty upon raw cotton, and to take measures to stop the stocking of raw cotton by speculators in order to prevent an artificial rise in its price ?"

The Hon'ble Sir Thomas Holland replied :—

"(a) The answer is in the affirmative.

(b) The imposition of an export duty on raw cotton would not be possible without legislation, and the Hon'ble Member will have observed from the speech of my Hon'ble Colleague, Sir James Meston, introducing the Financial Statement that there is no proposal to levy an export duty on raw cotton. With regard to the last part of the question, Government have powers under the Articles of Commerce Ordinance (IX of 1914) to deal with stock unreasonably withheld from the market."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel asked :—

Manage-
Railway.

12. "Will Government be pleased to state what, if any, has been the decision arrived at by them regarding the management of the East Indian Railway ?"

The Hon'ble Sir Arthur Anderson replied :—

"The Hon'ble Member is referred to the earlier part of the reply to the question by the Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel asked :—

13. " Have Government considered or do they propose to consider the question of forming Selection Committees composed of officials and non-officials for the purpose of selecting fresh recruits required to fill all posts in the public services carrying a monthly salary of Rs. 200 and above ? "

Formation of Selection Committees composed of non-officials and officials for the purpose of selecting fresh recruits.

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent replied :—

" Yes, Government have had this proposal under their consideration, and are disposed to favour it unless and until some better system can be devised. But the matter will be largely one for Local Governments."

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda asked :—

14. "(a) What was the total expenditure on Secondary Schools in the whole of India in 1917 ?

Expenditure on Secondary Schools.

(b) What part of this was contributed by the State ? "

The Hon'ble Sir C. Sankaran Nair replied :—

" The educational statistics are compiled for the financial, not the calendar, year. The total expenditure from all sources on secondary education during the financial year 1917-18 amounted to Rs. 3,38,68,078, to which provincial revenues contributed Rs. 84,11,399 or 24·8 per cent."

The Hon'ble Mr. W. A. Ironside asked :—

15. "(a) Have Government taken any steps to act upon the recommendations outlined in paragraph 239 of the Report of the Indian Industrial Commission with regard to the compulsory acquisition of land for the housing and accommodation under modern hygienic conditions of Industrial and Factory workpeople ?

Report of the Indian Industrial Commission, paragraph 239.

(b) Are Government aware that several important Industrial organisations in Bengal are already waiting to carry out schemes for the provision of model dwellings and small townships for the benefit of their work people, but are prevented from giving full effect to their proposals for lack of sufficient land ? "

The Hon'ble Sir Claude Hill replied :—

" (a) The Land Acquisition Act is administered by Local Governments, who are thereby empowered to decide in each case whether land can be compulsorily acquired. It is believed that Local Governments not infrequently acquire land for the purposes stated. Local Governments will doubtless consider the recommendation in paragraph 239 of the Industrial Commission's Report.

(b) Government are aware that important Industrial organisations in Bengal and elsewhere have adopted some, and are considering further, schemes for the amelioration of the conditions of their work-people. If they find that these schemes necessitate the acquisition of land, they will apply to Local Governments."

The Hon'ble Rai Sita Nath Ray Bahadur asked :—

16. "(a) Is it a fact that a number of steamers and flats purchased for war purposes by Government from steamer companies in India for inland service in Mesopotamia will be sold there to the highest bidder ?

Sale of steamers and flats in Mesopotamia.

(b) If the answer be in the affirmative, will Government be pleased to state when such sale will take place ?

(c) Will Government be pleased to consider the desirability of bringing the vessels back to India, and holding the auction in the respective places from which they had been purchased ?

(d) In case the vessels are sold in Mesopotamia, will Government be pleased to state what facilities, if any, they would offer to purchasers to bring the vessels back to India ? "

His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief replied :—

"It is not possible at present to reply specifically to the Hon'ble Member's questions. These vessels are the property of the War Office, and I am in communication with them in regard to their disposal. In the meantime, an officer of the Quartermaster General's Branch has been despatched to Mesopotamia to inspect and catalogue the various craft."

The Hon'ble Maharaja Sir Manindra Chandra Nandi asked :—

Division of services into Imperial and provincial branches.

17. "What recommendations have been made by the Government of India as to the division of services generally into Imperial and Provincial branches ?"

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent replied :—

"It is presumed that the Hon'ble Member is referring to paragraph 26 of the Report of the Public Services Commission. Speaking generally, the Government of India are disposed to agree with the principles there laid down, but they have not yet addressed the Secretary of State."

Establishment of a Central Technological Institute in India.

18. "Is it intended to establish a Central Technological Institute in India ? If so, will Government be pleased to state what progress has been made in the matter ?"

The Hon'ble Sir Thomas Holland replied :—

"The Government of India are not prepared to proceed with this question till they have received and considered the views of Local Governments on the recommendations made by the Industrial Commission on the subject of higher technical education."

The Hon'ble Raja Rajendra Narayan Bhanja Deo of Kanika asked :—

Creation of a sub-province of Orissa.

19. "(a) Have Government taken any steps for the creation of a sub-province of Orissa, to give effect to the recommendation contained in paragraph 246 of the Report on Constitutional Reforms ?

(b) If not, do Government propose to ask the Local Government to frame a scheme for that purpose at an early date, and publish it for expression of public opinion on the subject ? "

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent replied :—

"The Hon'ble Member seems to have misunderstood the recommendation in paragraph 246 of the Report, which is that the possibility of constituting Orissa as a separate sub-province should be considered by the Local Government after the introduction of the reforms. The Government of India have advised the Local Government that this question should not be considered until the reformed provincial Government has been constituted."

[7TH MARCH, 1919.]

[*Mir Asad Ali, Khan Bahadur ; Sir Claude Hill ;
The Vice-President ; Sir James Meston ;
Sir Fazulbhoy Currimbhoy.]The Hon'ble Mir Asad Ali, Khan Bahadur, asked :—20. “ (a) Will Government be pleased to state for each of the last ten years— Rice in the Madras
Presidency.

(1) the quantity of rice (i) exported from, and (ii) imported into the Madras Presidency ; and

(2) the total number of acres annually cultivated ?

(b) What is the quantity of rice now held in stock throughout the Presidency and the period for which it can last ? ”

The Hon'ble Sir Claude Hill replied :—

“ I lay on the table statements* showing :—

(1) the quantity of rice exported from and imported into the Madras Presidency during the ten years ending 1917-18 ; and

(2) the acreage under rice in that Presidency during the same period.

Regarding the quantity of rice held in stock in the Madras Presidency, the Hon'ble Member is referred to the reply given at the Council meeting on the 6th February to the question asked by the Hon'ble Rai Bahadur B. D. Shukul regarding the grain census of India generally, in which it was explained that the estimates of stocks furnished by Local Governments were too unreliable to justify any confident opinion being based upon them as to the sufficiency or otherwise of the grain supply of any particular province.”

THE FINANCIAL STATEMENT, 1919-20.

FIRST STAGE.

The Vice-President :—“ The Hon'ble Sir James Meston will now speak on the Financial Statement. ”The Hon'ble Sir James Meston :—“ Sir, I have no further proposals to lay before the Council. ”The Hon'ble Sir Fazulbhoy Currimbhoy :—“ Sir, I rise to congratulate the Hon'ble the Finance Member on the very able and lucid statement that he has laid before this Council. 11-18 A.M.

“ Sir, the war has fortunately terminated in a brilliant victory for the Allies, but we have still to bear the heavy military and railway expenditure in consequence of the war, and I, therefore, consider this as a war Budget. What India's military expenditure will be in the future will depend on the decision of the Peace Conference and the success that is attained by the League of Nations in securing the world's peace. I am, however, satisfied for the present that, in estimating the military expenditure for the next year, His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief has exercised the strictest economy, consistent with the imminent requirements of military efficiency.

“ Sir, I welcome the elaborate programme of Railway improvement. I think it is a sound decision and its results will be good. The money is urgently needed for renewing the permanent way and rolling-stock, and looking to the new era of industrial activity, that is foreshadowed in the country, I think the results will be beneficial. It will facilitate the movements of raw materials and help our export trade, upon which we have to depend largely until our industries have been fully developed. In this connection, Sir, I beg to suggest that when a final decision is arrived at by the Government on the recommendations of the Industrial Commission, the Government will allot a large amount to the development of the industries of this country and so make it depend more on its own manufactured products.

*Vide Appendix C.

[Sir Fazulbhoy Currimbhoy.] [7TH MARCH, 1919.]

" Sir, there is another point of importance, that of irrigation, which I should like to point out. The Hon'ble the Finance Member has referred in his statement to the various difficulties owing to the financial stringency and the depleted conditions of the staff, which have prevented the various projected irrigation schemes being undertaken. I hope, Sir, that important schemes like the Sukkur Barrage project, which affects Sindh, will be undertaken very soon along with the other irrigation projects in the Punjab. In a country like India, which is constantly in danger of being visited by famines, the construction of irrigation works is of just as much importance, if not more, as railways.

" Sir, coming now to that portion of the Budget which directly affects the commercial classes in India, I humbly beg to submit that the whole of the commercial community in this country have patiently borne all interference with trade to meet the requirements of an effective prosecution of the war. They have never said one word of protest during the continuation of the war against taxes, which in many cases imposed large burdens on them. Many extra levies were made on them piecemeal, and this year they will have to bear the extra burden of the excess profits tax. Sir, I have already expressed the views the Indian commercial community holds about this tax when the Bill was referred to the Select Committee, and I still maintain that the levy of this tax will be a serious handicap to the industrial enterprise in this country. While stating frankly my views with regard to the consequences of this duty, I do not wish to upset any arrangement which, in the opinion of this Council, is necessary, but I would urge that as a compensation for the burdens which would be imposed on the business community in this direction, liberal concessions may be given to business men, wherever they do not entail a direct loss of revenue, or a direct financial outlay, and I hope that the Indian business-men also will come in for their share of the concessions at the hands of the Government.

" Before I conclude, Sir, I wish to congratulate the Government on the bold step they have taken in relieving a portion of the middle classes which was hit most by the rise of prices by raising the limit at which income-tax is chargeable from Rs. 1,000 to Rs. 2,000. The cost of collection would be greatly reduced by the elimination of so many small assesses. I would also submit that the yield, under this head, would increase very far beyond expectation, since the rules under the new Act involving a declaration of income have come into force. The increase will be welcome, and I feel that the concession, in regard to making up of any loss on account of the raising up of this limit, which the Finance Member proposes to make for the Provincial Governments, will not ultimately cost anything to the Government of India, because of the enhanced receipts under this head. The Hon'ble the Finance Member has mentioned in his statement that he has pitched his figures as high as prudence permits, but I still hope that, looking to the elastic conditions of the revenue of this country, the Budget will result in a larger surplus than expected. Sir, I beg to submit that a more liberal attitude should be adopted under the heads enumerated by the Hon'ble the Finance Member under Provincial Budgets, namely, education, industries, public institutions and services, developments of forests, agricultural experiments, etc. I would suggest to you, Sir, the omission of some of the limiting clauses in this, such as where the expansion of education is indicated with the proviso that, 'in directions where it has been hampered by war economy.' Sir, a free hand should be given to Provincial Governments to extend education and sanitation wherever it is possible; perhaps it would not be unwise to anticipate the proposals contained in the joint report of His Excellency the Viceroy and Mr. Montagu, in regard to Provincial finance, in leaving large discretion to the Provincial Governments to spend their own share of the divided heads and of provincial revenue as they like, and I would urge that the Local Governments should be free to draw not to a 'moderate' extent only, as Sir James Meston mentions, but to the full extent, on the accumulated balances which now stand at their credit with the Government of India.

“ In conclusion, Sir, while frankly giving expression to our opinions, I can assure the Government on behalf of the Indian commercial community that it will be their endeavour to help Government, as far as possible, in the difficult times which are ahead and to make the task of Sir James Meston as easy as possible by the fullest co-operation.”

The Hon'ble Mr. G. S. Khaparde:—“ Sir, this annual Budget is like the annual X'mas pudding. All Departments come, all guests are there, some of them are invited, others are, I suppose, uninvited, but anyhow everybody is there, and everybody looks forward to get something out of it. Well, in this case as usual, all the Departments are here and everybody that wants anything out of the revenues has made his demand and it has been met; some more fully than the others as usual. The Railway people, for instance, are masters of locomotion; they reached first, and they get about the largest slice out of the pudding, and these people appear to be very fortunate. They have been exempted from paying the excess profits tax, and they are getting something more in the way of enhanced rates. They give nothing out of the enhanced rates that they charge for travelling. They give nothing out of the large amount of money that they make here on account of the great traffic. Furthermore, the Railway Kings think that their offices are located in England and they need not pay the excess profits tax here. They may be paying some tax in England, I quite agree, and very likely they will have to pay there, but at the same time they enjoy there all the benefits of a good climate and a good business centre. But I do not see why from the monies earned in India by the railways they should not pay their share of the profits to the State here.

11-25 A.M.

“ There is another thing about this matter I do not grudge it. The soldiers have got about 33 per cent. and I do not grudge it, because after all they fought very well in the war and they should have it. I do not mind that amount. But to these Railway people I would not give so much. I would really give them half and distribute the other half between sanitation and education. After all, I suppose it is most important for a man to live, and the next important thing is he should learn how to earn something to live by and then enjoy the luxury of travelling and so on. So I would take away half of what has been given to the Railways and give it to education and sanitation.

“ There is another matter which I forgot to mention, and that is this, there is one amusing figure in the charges for the Army. It is said in our sacred books that in the time of Rama, Ravana headed an army so big that he had Padma in those days. I do not know the exact figure, but it is said somewhere that it was beyond 16 million of drum boys in his army. Well, at any rate I do not go so far as 16 million, but we spent 8 lakhs—it is 8 lakhs on paying barbers for shaving our army. That is rather a large figure, but it is still there.

“ Then there is another matter, about the currency notes, which I wish to speak one word about. I should not have said anything about them but that there is a sentence in the Financial Statement saying that a time may come when these notes will never be cashed at all, that is to say, the notes will remain as notes. They might get notes in exchange for them I suppose, but they never receive any cash, they will never be able to claim any cash for them. I hope that will never be so, but it will be really a very bad day when it does, because the poor ignorant illiterate villager understands nothing about this paper currency, and he is always unwilling to part with his silver and gold, and if that bit of paper can never be converted into gold or silver, I am afraid the paper currency will have a very poor chance indeed. This arises out of the circumstance of which I spoke about last year, that much of our money is locked up in England. Generally all countries keep their balances in the country itself. If we keep all our balances here, then they would get into the banks and would find their way into circulation and thus help the merchants. I spoke about it last year too, and it was thought that because of the difficulties of transport, we began to keep our money here; and what money there was in England we tried to take it by drawing Bills on England payable in England, and in that way we tried to get all that money here. I hope that policy will now be pursued. One thing has materialised since then, and that is, that we have now got our own mints here and they are in full working order. England is a rich country, they do not really want money, they are very unwilling to pay interest, they pay about 2 per cent. or so, whereas, we borrow here at 5 per cent., so I think we had better keep all our money here.

“ One more observation I wish to make, and that is about the raising of the taxable minimum. That is a great blessing to the poorer classes, because the limit of taxable income has been raised from Rs. 1,000 to Rs. 2,000. That will do a great deal of good, and I suppose a large number of these poor people will be very thankful to the Hon'ble the Finance Member for the concession he has shown them in this respect.

“ Excepting this, the whole Budget is a war Budget and there is really not much to say. I feel very glad that it has been possible to introduce this piece of legislation in favour of poor people, namely, releasing them from paying any income-tax on incomes under Rs. 2,000 a year. That is all I have to say.”

11-82 A.M.

The Hon'ble Rai Bahadur B. D. Shukul :—“ Sir, I congratulate the Hon'ble the Finance Minister, Sir James Meston, on the lucidity of the Financial Statement which he presented to the Council on the 1st instant, and do so particularly on the wise and statesmanlike precept with which he concluded his Narrative. Sir, I refer to that part of his statement in paragraph 77 which contains the very essence of the future financial policy of the Government of India as it were, and with which every one of us, as I believe, must be in complete accord. I mean the statement that ‘coupled with courageous outlay on the essentials of progress, a strict economy in all non-essentials will in the near future be more than ever necessary than it has ever been.’ I wish a beginning had been made in that direction in the present Financial Statement, but in that we are rather disappointed. Provisions made on the expenditure side for the ensuing year are distinguished by the striking feature that nearly 33 per cent. of the total expenditure will be consumed by the Military Department, and a heavy capital outlay amounting to £17·7 millions besides 14·4 out of revenues has been budgeted for the railways, while other beneficial Departments such as education, sanitation, agriculture and industries are allowed to starve. It is the huge expenditure on railways that I do seriously complain of, and I do so for two reasons. In the first place, I think it is quite unfair that any one department should be pampered at the expense of all the rest, and secondly, because the allotments proposed are, in my humble opinion, disproportionately high.

“ The present moment, Sir, is a great one. Questions of very great importance pertaining to the re-adjustment of social, political, educational, agricultural and industrial problems are awaiting solution at the hands of the Government of India. It is but in the fitness of things that the Government of India should now gradually divert their attention from the problems of war to the no less complicated and urgent problems of peace and reconstruction. The war of physical forces has no doubt come to an end, but a new war, a war of still gigantic character, is yet to begin. I mean the world-wide economic struggle to which India can no longer remain indifferent. Truly it is said that the ‘horrors of war are now over and the horrors of peace are in sight’. Great opportunities for material progress are present, and if you do not care to avail of these opportunities quickly ‘the country,’ I dare say, ‘will sink into greater poverty than before’. Do not let the present opportunity slip and do not let the urgent domestic reforms stand over till the very opportunities created by war pass away, and then the Government and the country will have to pay a very heavy penalty for their neglect.

"Sir, India has already missed a great opportunity presented to her for the development of indigenous industries by the Great War, but there was no help. India was not prepared for the emergency. You never cared to make her sufficiently strong and self-reliant for the purpose, and what was the result? The imports from the enemy countries, no doubt, ceased as the result of war. But Japan stepped into the shoes and flooded the Indian markets with its own articles of merchandise and we remained where we were. That is why Lord Sinha in his speech at the Conference of the Overseas Press Centre declared that 'However efficient the system of government might be in India, it would be generally admitted that India is a very poor country, and unless the whole policy of Laissez Faire is changed, it is likely to remain so. India has not been prosperous for the long time past and is not prosperous now.' To those who think that India has made great profit during the war, Lord Sinha pointed out that 'the ownership of the Mills was exclusively British and that was where the profits went. They certainly did not go to the ryots who had to pay war prices for food, salt, cloth and other necessities, but did not receive corresponding increased payment to meet their higher charges. India has been the hewer of wood and drawer of water for the rest of the Empire' and, Sir, I was not a little amused when in the face of this I heard the Hon'ble the Finance Minister say to the Council the other day that 'the good season of recent years and the full prices paid for agricultural produce must have accumulated unusual reserves of rural wealth and it may be expected that widespread or acute distress will be averted.' I dare say my Hon'ble friend is too optimistic. This is how the actual condition of the ryots misunderstood and their interests suffer.

"The perusal of paragraphs 4 and 5 of the Hon'ble the Finance Minister's Narrative amply shows how the failure of a single year's monsoon is sufficient to create a situation of acute distress and widespread famine, and how more easily susceptible the rural classes are to the attack of virulent epidemics like influenza and plague than urban.

"As for famine and scarcity the people have hardly got any staying power left in them. With their uncertain and slender resources they do not find themselves in a position to tide over the difficulties created by a single year's failure of harvest. Although the Government gave a solemn pledge to eradicate famine from the land, when the Famine Insurance Fund was formed, and although an amount of one and a half crore of rupees is carried away towards the fund every year, yet it is a pity to find that an earnest attempt has not been made to infuse a new life as it were into the ryots by improving their moral and material conditions. Sir, the time has come when the utmost resources of the State should be husbanded and utilized for the purpose, and the Government should redeem their pledge.

"Sir, the health of the country is bad. Influenza alone has carried away six million souls at one sweep and has added a big item to the already heavy bill of mortality which the people of India have to pay to malaria, cholera and plague every year, as an outcome of the insanitary condition in which they live and the want of cheap and adequate medical relief. Major F. Norman White of the Indian Medical Service and the Sanitary Commissioner in his report on the influenza epidemic bears testimony to the fact that 'the rural areas suffered considerably more than the towns'. And why so? Obviously because the masses living in rural areas are relatively poorer and cannot afford to have proper nourishment and sufficient food.

"Famine, scarcity, plague and pestilence have become the permanent factors of the existing conditions of rural life in India, and so long as you do not take care to help the improvement of public health and the development of industries and agriculture, the conditions of the people will not improve. Hitherto the policy of the Government has been to care more for its own revenues than for the development of the people's resources, and that is what ought not to be. Sir, I am not alone in holding this view and I would take this opportunity of drawing the attention of this Council and the Government to what Sir O'Moore Creagh, the late Commander-in-Chief of India, says in his book styled 'Indian Studies'—'the vital importance of the land question,' he observes, 'is not understood either in England nor even by the Government of India itself. Although legislation about land is unceasing, it is not guided by any broad policy or intimate knowledge of the requirements of the dumb teeming millions who live directly or indirectly on agriculture, and it has become quite mechanical. The main object which the present land policy has in view is to screw money out of land. The official who carries it out thinks daily more and more of this and less about the condition of those who live in the land. There has been much discussion as to whether the tax taken from agriculture is too heavy or not. Certainly it is the heaviest tax on that industry taken in any country in the world and the worst of it is that it maintains an ever-increasing tendency. It is this tendency, Sir, which has to be checked. Other latent resources of the country must be tapped and larger sums have to be provided to enable the departments of education, sanitation, agriculture and industries to meet the ever-growing needs and requirements of the country. In that will lie the real salvation of the country.

"Sir, I therefore suggest that the allotment for the railways be reduced to half at least. No justification has been offered of the forward step taken by the Government in embarking upon such an ambitious railway programme. If we have been able to manage with the existing railway facilities so long, we can very well afford to wait for some time more.

"There are other crying needs of the country which have to be met, and to which I have already referred. By reducing the railway allotment as suggested by me, you will not only be in a position to sanction handsome grants for the purposes I have asked for, but you can also make a decent provision for the purpose of 'irrigation.' I for one am unable to make out as to why the Government should be so partial to railways. In my humble opinion irrigation should have as strong a claim upon the coffers of the State as the railways. Money spent on irrigation is never lost. It not only adds to the resources of the people by increasing the yield of land and reducing the pinch of scarcity, but it brings in more profits to the State than the railways. The percentage of net profit to capital outlay on productive works of irrigation during the past four years has remained steady between 5 and 6 per cent., whereas the percentage of profit to capital outlay on the railways did not exceed 3.03 per cent. at the best, and for the ensuing year it is estimated at 1.79 per cent. only. I would, therefore, suggest that a portion of amount saved from the Railway allotment should be carried to irrigation and to other beneficial departments such as I have already enumerated.

"Sir, when I demand larger allotments for such departments as education, sanitation, etc., it should not be understood that I am unmindful of the financial difficulties of the Government of India at present. The Hon'ble the Finance Minister in paragraph 77 of the Narrative has referred to the question of finding out ways and means for meeting the various heavy liabilities that are hanging over the heads of the Government of India in several directions, and he enjoins upon us to be prepared for a relatively high scale of taxation to get rid of our superfluous obligations. In this connection I may be permitted to point out that, considering the chronic poverty of the people of India, it would be no exaggeration to say that India is already an over-taxed country. The great drawback at present is, that the fiscal policy of India is influenced by interests other than purely Indian. So long as India is not given fiscal autonomy and the control of its own tariffs, the difficulty of finances will always remain and India will never be able to command the necessary funds, which will be commensurate with her requirements.

"Sir, further, I fail to see why a considerable portion of the large reserves of Indian money, held in England, which have been steadily increasing since the war began, should not be partly utilized for the purpose of the industrial development in the country. In my humble opinion a sum of Rs. 15 or 20 crores or so out of the 50 crores of gold standard reserve could safely be drawn upon for industrial purposes.

"Sir, there is yet another subject of importance to which I wish to make a passing reference. I mean the export of foodstuffs, especially wheat, which, as pointed out in paragraph 6 of the Narrative, reached the record figure of 1,500,000 tons. Sir, the people living in this country, in my humble opinion, have the first and foremost claim upon the produce of the land, and it is only the surplus grain over and above their actual wants that should be permitted to leave the shores of India. Is it fair and just to the people, I may be permitted to ask, that while famine and scarcity prevail in the country, thousand and thousand tons of wheat should have been allowed to be exported . . .

[7TH MARCH, 1919.] [*Rai Bahadur B. D. Shukul ; Sir Claude Hill ;
Rai Sita Nath Ray Bahadur.]*

The Hon'ble Sir Claude Hill :—"I would like to intervene at this stage and ask the Hon'ble Member to what period he refers."

The Hon'ble Rai Bahadur B. D. Shukul :—"I refer to the period just before the recent restrictions on the export of wheat were imposed.

"Sir, before I resume my seat I wish to draw the attention of the Government and that of the Council to the two immediate needs of the Central Provinces, namely, the University and the High Court, which have to be provided for, and this the Government should have in view. Last year when I moved a Resolution with regard to the former the Hon'ble Sir Sankaran Nair assured me that the matter will not be delayed any longer than was necessary. About a year has passed since then and practically nothing has been done. The question may now be taken up in right earnest, and I request that the necessary legislation for the University of Nagpur may be introduced at the next Simla Session and that necessary provision for the University may be made in the Budget for the ensuing year. As for the second, namely, the High Court, the Hon'ble Mr. Dadabhoy moved a Resolution to have the existing Judicial Commissioner's Court raised to the status of a Chief Court, and an assurance was then given that the Local Government would be consulted, and there is no knowing what action has been taken since then. I am glad to notice that provision has been made in the Budget to raise the Chief Court of Punjab to the status of a High Court, and I hope the claims of the Central Provinces in this matter will not go unrecognized.

"Sir, I have done. I have only to thank the Hon'ble the Finance Minister for raising the taxable minimum of the income-tax to Rs. 2,000, which will go a long way indeed to afford substantial relief to the people of the middle classes—men of average means who have been seriously hit by an abnormal rise in the cost of living due to high prices."

The Hon'ble Rai Sita Nath Ray Bahadur :—"Sir, the Council is grateful to the Hon'ble the Finance Member for the lucid statement he has made regarding the financial position and the estimates. He has taken us over the financial field with great tact and consummate ability.

11-47 A.M.

"This is a Budget, if I may say so, of surprises and disappointments, and, I am sorry to say, the disappointments overshadow the surprises. The meagre provision for sanitation, education and the development of industries is a matter of great disappointment. For I cannot conceal from myself the fact that we had all along entertained high hopes that, with the cessation of war and the return of normal times, large sums of money would be available for the spread of education (I refer particularly to primary and technical education) without which, as the Hon'ble the Finance Member rightly observes, 'our political progress would be largely nugatory,' the improvement of sanitation and the establishment of industries in the country. The obligations of the Government in these matters have always been realised and admitted. And it would have been in the fitness of things if the victorious termination of the war in which India has borne her share of sufferings and sacrifices, had been signalled by the adoption of a more liberal policy in the matter of the discharge of these obligations. It would have gone to reduce, if not remove, discontent which furnishes breeding ground for the baneful germs of anarchy and Bolshevism which we all detest.

"The Financial Statement presented by the Hon'ble the Finance Member is one which belongs to the period of war as also to the period of peace—with the prospect of reconstruction looming large in the horizon. I wish he had told us a good deal more about the reconstruction schemes which the Government of India, along with the other civilised Governments, must take up. England has already formed her Ministry of Reconstruction, and a Reconstruction Board in India would not be out of place. I am of opinion—and my apprehension is shared by some of my colleagues—that if we lag behind and fail to move with the changing conditions in a world which is now in the crucible, we shall have reasons to repent in the future. This matter deserves the consideration of the Government of India.

[Rai Sita Nath Ray Bahadur.]

“ The only tangible scheme of reconstruction placed before us is a huge provision for the railways amounting in all to something like £24 millions, exceeding Lord Inchcape's bold estimate by about £12 millions. The Council is aware that from my place in this Council I have repeatedly advocated railway extension and sufficient financial backing to support it. Last year we were told by Sir William Meyer that with continued wear and tear of rolling-stock and absence of adequate facility for renewal, a time must come at which the railways cannot carry all the passengers and tonnage that they might otherwise convey. The situation was serious ; and I, as a member of the mercantile community, know from personal experience the inconveniences which have been suffered by the people for want of rolling-stock. Even now with superhuman efforts one can hardly secure wagons for the transport of goods. Yes, to many of us it is a marvel that the railways have been able to do what they have done with a wholly starvation-allowance for even their barest necessities. And I agree with the Hon'ble the Finance Member that we should cheerfully assist the Railway Board in making up the necessary lee-way. The allotment for renewals must be welcome. But I have seen the allotment of £17½ millions for ' Capital Programme ' adversely criticised as far in excess of the requirements. It has also been said that much of the rolling-stock could be saved by proper reorganisation of transport arrangements on European or American methods. This, Sir, is a highly technical question, and I feel great diffidence in mentioning this matter to the Council. I am, however, only voicing the informed opinion of a number of men who have had considerable railway experience. It was in Lord Curzon's time that the late Mr. Thomas Robertson came here and reported on our railway system. Time has come for another periodical inquiry into the whole organisation, including the Railway Board.

“ Next in order comes the expenditure on the Army which the Hon'ble the Finance Member has provided for at £41 millions. “ To a man of peace this is a huge amount. But we have the satisfaction of knowing that we have in His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief one who is a keen economist ; and we must rely on him for retrenchment and economy. Though I cannot reconcile myself to the notion that in future our army must cost more than in pre-war days, we can be reasonably sure that money allotted would be spent to the best advantage of the army and the country. Sir, £41 millions against our normal of £20 millions is, however, a great burden on Indian revenue. Out of the £41 millions, £8½ millions represent India's additional war contribution undertaken by this Council in September last. Thus the actual increase comes up to about £12 millions. And this is, indeed, a substantial increase for a poor country like India—a vast peasant Empire where comparative prosperity depends on the caprice of the clouds and famines recur with the periodicity of climatic changes. I take this opportunity of mentioning that in view of the Mesopotamia Commission Report our whole military system requires careful re-consideration. We have now reaped the harvest, the seeds of which were scattered in agony and tears, and the time has come when careful attention should be bestowed upon the findings of the Commission which could not be considered at a time when the responsibilities of the war absorbed all our energies, and we all supported the Premier when he deprecated their discussion and said ‘ Get on with the war. ’ I must say that while the country will not grudge legitimate expenditure on the army, that expenditure should be commensurate with its fiscal capacity.

" There has also been a substantial increase of expenditure in the Civil Department. A provision of £24 millions has been made against an average of £18 millions. I confess that I fail to see where the economy comes in. In the concluding paragraph of his Statement the Hon'ble the Finance Member has emphasised the necessity of exercising rigid economy. This certainly is a consummation devoutly to be wished. And I would like to know how the Hon'ble the Finance Member proposes to translate his wishes into action. My own conviction is that the mere issuing of circular letters will not be of much use.

" Sir James Meston has given us a frank and graphic account of our currency position. He has referred to the hoarding habit of the people. Sir, old superstitions die hard and no wonder the superstition about the hoarding of silver by poor people still flourishes in official circles. But the sooner our Finance Members get rid of the incubus of the mythical millions buried underground, the better for us. I hope to be pardoned when I say that from my experience I can assure my Hon'ble friend that the hoarding habit no longer exists. People now try to invest their savings, however small, to secure a return ; and the success of the Cash Certificates is an indication of the eagerness with which people seek outlets for investment.

" Sir, in conclusion, I thank the Hon'ble the Finance Member for the relief that he has given to 237,000 assesseees out of a total number of 381,000 assessed to the income-tax. The amount sacrificed is such as the Government of India can well afford to sport with, but at a time when prices have gone up and scarcity has cast a gloom over the country, the relief afforded will be much appreciated by the middle classes who have suffered most by the abnormal rise of prices. Moreover, the relief afforded is well deserved ; for, no class of assesseees is more harassed than that on the lowest rung of the ladder of assessment."

The Hon'ble Maharaja Sir Manindra Chandra Nandi :— 11-58 A.M.

" Sir, the first Financial Statement of Sir James Meston is at once a great surprise and a riddle. I quite realise that Finance Members have not the opportunities of writing on a clean slate, and they are generally not the masters of the circumstances through which the fortunes of a country pass in years of crisis. Sir James Meston, in the Statement which he presented to this Council last week, has had to deal neither with ante-bellum nor post-bellum condition of things, nor is it quite a war or a peace Budget either. Naturally he has to deal with very large military commitments, and faces all the legacies of a long and arduous war in a heroic spirit. While he is not afraid to raise money in both hands, he does not seem to be very nervous in spending it generously either. While he preaches throughout his Narrative the wisdom of the gospel of retrenchment and economy, he seems to cast this doctrine very often to the winds and go in boldly for daring expenditure. As a result of this state of financial mind, he takes the fundamental principle of economics upside down and, unlike ordinary human calculations, he does not cut his coat according to the cloth he has, but examines the needs of the spending departments of the Government in order to arrive at a total revenue which will be necessary to provide for them. This appears to me to be a novel economic dogma and an unwise fiscal theory.

" I hope I will not be misunderstood when I criticise Sir James Meston's first Budget as a great financial surprise. I find him remitting taxation on the one hand, while raising revenue of the State by a fresh taxation on the other. Yet he fails to take courage in both hands to raise our revenue from opium, lest our respect for conventions may be misinterpreted by well-meaning humanitarians and philanthropists in other parts of the world. It may not be generally known that, while we have sacrificed a huge revenue for a mere mawkish sentimentality, China is not at all feeling abashed to cultivate poppy in her own soil and offer numerous temptations to her people to smoke and drink opium. I am sorry Sir James' courage has failed in a singular way to tackle this opium question adequately. With no other additional sources of revenue in hand, I do not blame Sir James for imposing a tax on excess profits. When you have got to raise your revenue by taxation, it is well that the burden should fall on the capable shoulders of the well-to-do rather than on the broken back of the never-do-wells. I take this opportunity, however, of congratulating Sir James for the only fiscal concession which has been granted to the people of this country in his first Budget. In view of the present high range of prices of all necessities of life, it is a great satisfaction to note that no fewer than 2 lakhs and 37 thousand Indians, belonging to the middle classes, will no longer be caught in the meshes of our income-tax levy. It would mean a great relief to these people. On the revenue side of our finance, Sir, I have no other criticism to make.

[Maharaja Sir Manindra Chandra Nandi.]

"I now pass on to the expenditure side of the Budget, and I sympathise with Sir James for his having to meet the legacies of a great war. I have no quarrel with Sir James for his heavy military disbursements, but it strikes me as something very wrong that a country which has no more than £123,190,800 as its total revenue should be asked to spend £41,195,000, or nearly a third of it, on her military services alone. It is a great pity that a poor country like India should be saddled with England's war expenses in Mesopotamia and East Africa, but I suppose we had no alternative. I only hope that, when the world enters into a new era of peace, our normal military requirements will figure as only a minor item in the Budget, and that our State finance shall not again be allowed to 'be outpaced by the imperative demands of military efficiency.'

"Speaking of military expenditure, I beg to avail myself of this opportunity to ask for more commissions in His Majesty's army for qualified Indians and greater facilities for our people to get admission into it. I hope the time will soon come when it will be possible to pay our soldiers a higher scale of pay and give them more decent accommodation and barracks to live in and when citizen armies will be trained to do garrison work in times of need and emergency.

"I do not also intend to join issue with Sir James for his daringly optimistic railway programme. I am not the man to jib at railway expenditure, for I realise what a great asset our railways are to the State, or how necessary they are for the distribution of the agricultural produces of the country. The railways appear to me to be the only item of our public expenditure which benefit both the State and the people equally well. So I do not grudge Sir James spending more than £17½ millions upon capital outlay on railways alone for the next year. I pray, Sir, you will allow me leave to express the hope in this connection that our railways should be nationalised as early as possible, the main lines should be put under State management immediately, and most of the materials required for them should be manufactured in India so far as possible.

"While I recognise and appreciate Sir James Meston's effort to make a courageous outlay on one of the essentials of modern progress, I regret he does not take a very bold step or initiate a courageous policy for the proper development 'of our national intelligence and earning power.' Sir James, unfortunately for us, contents himself by expressing the pious hope that in near future 'we shall have to launch into very heavy expenditure for the education and well-being of the people, without which our political progress would be largely nugatory.' How we wish that Sir James had budgetted for a courageous outlay on our education, sanitation and industries, without the proper development of which we shall never be able to stand or get on as a nation. British rule in India would have been greatly justified to-day before the eyes of the world if, after so many decades, the percentage of literacy in this country could have been shown at a higher figure than 50 per cent. instead of less than 10 per cent. that obtains at the present moment. Our developments in industrial and sanitary conditions have been equally disappointing, and very badly need looking after. While Sir James stints money for education, sanitation and industries, he gives away 2 million pounds to the British troops as war bonus. This attitude of Sir James is a riddle which perplexes me very much.

7TH MARCH, 1919.] [Maharaja Sir Manindra Chandra Nandi; Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjea.]

"Sir, I will mention one other point before I come to my conclusion. Sir James is an optimist financier and believes 'in the accumulation of unusual reserves of rural wealth,' and thinks that 'there is much diffused prosperity in the country which even high prices and local scarcity cannot seriously impair.' Sir James, I am afraid, has very little knowledge of the real condition of our people, and how hard they have been hit by the persistently high range of prices of all the necessities of life that have obtained in this country since nearly a year. The condition of a people, amongst 30 crores of which about 2 lakhs and 27 thousand only are able to invest small sums in State loans, at even $5\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. of interest, and amongst which also 3 lakhs and 81 thousand men only earn more than Rs. 1,000 a year, and whose average annual income does not exceed Rs. 30 a year per head, must be considered very low and must be a special anxiety of the Government. For such a people to be hard hit by high prices opens up a vista of sorrow and suffering, miseries and privations, which no language can sufficiently describe. If it is a fact that these high prices have been forced up by general world-factors and by the inflation of our paper currency, it is high time for the Government to look into the whole question with great care and consideration. I find in the Budget itself several statements made by Sir James himself regarding this unwelcome inflation, though we are assured it has not been allowed to go 'beyond the sheer necessities of the time.' The 'sheer necessities of the time' require a very satisfactory explanation, when we find that, while our paper currency stood on the 31st of March 1915 at $55\frac{1}{2}$ crores, to-day it is about 150 crores. I know that every belligerent country in the world has had to finance itself in some measure by an abnormal recourse to the inflation of paper currency, or, as Sir James puts it, to the printing-press, but I am afraid the conditions of India do not go on all fours with those of the other countries of the world. Sir James himself admits that expanded currency, particularly credit, which takes the form of paper money, has a tendency to send up prices of things high. If that be so, and distinguished economists in different parts of the world maintain that it is so, then the Government must move at once to set matters right. A denunciation of India's 'sterile hoard of precious metals' and of 'the unassuaged thirst of her people for metallic currency'—which has been responsible for the addition of nearly 120 crores of rupees to our currency during the last four years,—may indicate the nature of the sore but is no remedy by itself. Sir, I appeal to Government to give this matter their most anxious consideration, for high prices of all necessities of life mean a lot of suffering and trouble to a people so poor as we have in this country. Sir, I do not care to repeat here the truism that a discontented and a hungry people stands as a great danger and menace to the peace and prosperity of a State."

The Hon'ble Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjea:— "Sir, before 12-10 P.M.
I address myself to the substance of the Budget, may I be permitted to offer my congratulations to the Hon'ble the Finance Minister on the form and the manner of his presentment. Sir, owing, it may be, to a constitutional infirmity, or speaking as a Hindu, owing perhaps to my sins of omission and commission in a former birth, the figures, the dry-as-dust figures of a Financial Statement have a profoundly soporific effect on my nerves; they are apt to put me to sleep. But, Sir, on Saturday last as I listened to the speech of my Hon'ble friend the Finance Minister, my interest was roused, my attention was rivetted, my soporific tendencies for the moment disappeared, and when his speech was over I was filled with admiration for the clearness, the force and the skillfulness of his presentment.

"Sir, various criticisms have appeared in the newspapers regarding the Budget statement, and we have had a repetition of those criticisms in this Council Chamber to-day. One newspaper commenting upon the Budget says that in one sense it is a peoples' Budget. Another newspaper belonging to a different school of thought observes that it is ominous; a third says that it is disappointing. In the midst of this conflicting guidance, the situation becomes somewhat puzzling. If our guides sing in these divergent and contradictory tunes what should we do? It seems to me, Sir, that our duty is plain. We should be a law unto ourselves, and I take it, Sir, that it is the high and exalted function of this Legislative Assembly—it will be one by and by—to give the lead to public opinion and to determine its attitude. For a Finance Minister at a time of stress and strain to remove taxation yielding an annual revenue of Rs. 75 lakhs, because it presses hard upon a poor section of the community is a financial achievement which is bound to appeal to the popular imagination and evoke popular gratitude. Sir, no financial reformer, not even the most ardent of his class, has ventured to make this suggestion on an occasion like this. The conception is the Government's own, and the Government has carried it out without the intervention of extraneous advocacy or extraneous pressure. Sir, we are here more or less critics of the Government, some of us very relentless critics, but I say that we should render unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's. Sir, to remove a tax of this kind and to impose another tax upon super-profits is evidence of the spirit of democracy leavening a bureaucratic administration on the eve of the introduction of responsible government. May this spirit grow and deepen, for nothing is more calculated to smooth the path for the introduction of representative institutions and to ensure their success than a broad-minded, sympathetic, democratic spirit like this. Sir, while there are those who have been making large profits as the result of this war, there is no class of the community which has been more hard hit than those in receipt of moderate and fixed salaries. Prices have gone up; their incomes have remained the same; their sufferings are great. To them the raising of the taxable minimum of the income-tax from Rs. 1,000 to Rs. 2,000 would be a welcome and grateful boon. And, Sir, this uprise in prices is a world-wide movement, and India cannot escape it. I take it, therefore, that the relief now given will be a permanent feature of our financial arrangements, and the fact that the Government of India, though confronted with enormous financial difficulties, should introduce this reform, is, to my mind, evidence of its firm determination to make this relief permanent, and that there will not be, as in the case of salt, a reversion to the old scale. For it is not expected that prices will go down to their former level when normal conditions have been restored. In the same spirit and in conformity with it, it is a small matter, but I feel bound to notice it, the Government has made a grant of a lakh and a quarter to the Bengal Government to increase the pay of the ministerial establishment. Sir, this was a question in which I took deep interest while I was a Member of the Bengal Legislative Council. I pleaded for these clerks in the ministerial establishment, and I am glad that I did not plead in vain, and I find that the process of amelioration is now proceeding apace. In this connection may I make an appeal to my Hon'ble friend the Finance Minister in regard to a memorial which has been addressed to the Government by the clerks of the Accounts Branch of the Postal and Telegraph offices praying for an increase of their salaries. It is a long-standing matter. Their grievance has not been looked into; it has certainly not been remedied, and I trust my Hon'ble friend will be good enough to pass early and sympathetic orders in regard to this matter.

“ Sir, I find it stated on page 10 of the Financial Statement that it has become necessary again in the interests of the poor to commence the manufacture and the distribution of cotton cloth. In reply to the question which I put and which has been answered to-day, the Hon'ble Sir Thomas Holland has admitted the fact that there has been a steady rise in the price of cloth. I suggested the remedy. The remedy has not at present, at any rate, been accepted. I do not know what the action of the Government would be in regard to this matter, but I do know as a public man intimately associated with public affairs that the tactics of the speculators have played a considerable part in raising the prices of the necessities of life and of cotton cloth in particular. Sir, rice at the present moment in Delhi, good rice, is selling at Rs. 18 to Rs. 20 a maund, almost a fabulous price, a famine price. In Bengal, it is a little better. But in October last when the upward trend first began to manifest itself I interested myself in the question and found from my personal inquiries that the rise in the price was largely due to the holding back of stocks by interested persons who wanted to force up the prices. Speculation by traders is the gravest problem in the interest of the poor for the consideration of the Government. What the solution should be I do not know, it passes my comprehension, I am not an administrator, I am not a Statesman, but I do venture to submit with all the emphasis that I can command that it is a problem which in the interests of the poor the Government is bound to take in hand and find a solution, whatever it may be, and that as early as possible. The ungrateful personality of the speculator has thrust itself into far greater prominence than should have been allowed and has helped to raise prices. It seems to me that the Government must find a remedy for that.

“ Sir, let me now refer to the statement of the critic who says that the Budget is ominous. That critic belongs to a school of thought different from my own. He has not taken me into his confidence. I do not know what is at the back of his mind, but I suspect that what he means to suggest, what he intends to imply, is that the military expenditure is excessive. It is undoubtedly very large and it has to be justified. But, Sir, we must recognise that we have just emerged from a great war, that the situation is peculiar, that the conditions are abnormal. The safety of India, the safety of the Empire with which the prosperity of India is bound up, with which are linked the prospects of our future advancement, must always be the first and foremost consideration. No educated Indian will grudge the expenditure that may be necessary for this purpose. But every educated Indian, in view of the enormous expenditure that has to be incurred in connection with our domestic and industrial developments, will also insist that this expenditure should be reduced at the earliest possible opportunity. There is indeed a downward trend. The expenditure of this year has been reduced by £2 millions below that of last year; but it has been increased by £8 millions in consequence of the grants that were made in this Council. Be that as it may, we the representatives of the educated community, assembled round this table, we insist that in the re-adjustment of the financial burden in regard to military expenditure between England and India, the amplest justice should be done to the interests of India. That has not always been done, I am sorry to have to say. I invite the attention of Hon'ble Members to the minority report of the Welby Commission of 1897 signed by Mr. Dadabhoy Naraoji, Sir William Wedderburn and Mr. Caine. They distinctly point out that in many past transactions—I hope it is ancient history—in many past transactions the financial interests of India have been sacrificed by the dominant partner. Let me, however, gratefully acknowledge that the Government of India have always championed the interests of India and have pressed for financial justice to this country. I am sure the Government will follow its ancient and traditional policy and with even greater emphasis than before, in view of the claims of our people confirmed and consecrated by their blood and their treasure. My Hon'ble friend to my right referred to a bonus of £2,000,000 which has been granted to British troops. I should like to know something about the details. I do not wish to make any comments on that, unless I am in possession of the necessary information; but, Sir, it will be in the recollection of Hon'ble Members of this Council that at the Delhi Conference held in April last a unanimous resolution was adopted in favour of a substantial increase in the pay of Indian soldiers. Sir, the Indian soldiers have deserved well of their country and of the Empire. Their gallantry and devotion are beyond all praise. It is necessary in their interests, as well as in our own and in those of the Empire, to improve their status and increase their emoluments. If an addition is made to the pay of the Indian troops, I will undertake to say this on my own behalf, and I trust on behalf on my Hon'ble colleagues here, if an addition is made to the pay of the Indian troops and if it adds to the burden of our financial responsibility, we shall be glad to bear it in the interests of these poor men who made such large sacrifices and are prepared to make even heavier sacrifices for the sake of the Empire. I have spoken of an improvement in their emoluments. There ought to be also a raising of their status. My Hon'ble friend to my right has referred to the grant of King's

Commissions to Indians, six of them to fighting men and six of them to non-belligerents. I am bound to say that the number is inadequate, inadequate in view of the claims of our vast population. I would earnestly appeal to His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief to add to the number, to raise the status of Indian soldiers, and thus spread contentment and satisfaction among our people.

" One of the post-war problems that is likely to engage attention is the replacing of the Territorials who are now employed in this country. The wisest course to follow would be that they should be replaced by Indian battalions. This would ease the financial situation, spread contentment, pave the way for the formation of a Territorial army in India. The war has taught us many lessons, not the least notable of which is that India should be self-reliant and self-contained. So far as our numerical strength is concerned, we are as multitudinous as the stars of heaven, as countless as the sands of the sea. Why not organise and equip us and thus England may bid defiance to any combination that may be formed against her? I have an appeal to make to His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief in this connection in favour of the Bengali battalion that has been raised. I hope that battalion will not be disbanded. I hope their number will not be reduced. It will cause very grave disappointment in Bengal. The experiment is one that ought to succeed under proper encouragement and proper safeguards. Sir, you talk of anarchy and revolution, and we have been dealing in this Council Chamber with those problems. Find employment for the adventurous youths of Bengal in suitable military positions, and you will have taken a long forward step towards creating an atmosphere which will be an antidote to revolutionary and anarchical movements. These young men are adventurous, they want to risk their lives and do something daring. Place them in the front rank of battle if you like, expose them to the enemy's guns, then their ambition and their spirit of adventure will be satisfied, and you will have provided an antidote against anarchical crimes.

" Sir, reference has been made to railway expenditure. £24 millions have been budgetted for. I do not grudge it, I do not want to minimise the importance of railway expansion, but there are other branches of public expenditure, 'essentials of progress' to quote the words of my Hon'ble friend the Finance Minister, which have been starved, in regard to which no suitable stimulus has been provided in this Budget. Take for instance education and sanitation. I have got some figures for comparison. Railway expenditure for 1919-20 is put at £17,700,000, which means a 300 per cent. increase over that of the previous year, education £4,884,000 for 1919-20 as against £3,973,000 for 1918-19. Sanitation £957,000 as against £688,000 for 1918-19. In truth expenditure on railways (£24 millions), including capital and revenue expenditure, has increased over the revised figures of 1918-19 by 300 per cent., while expenditure on education has increased by 22·9 per cent., and that on sanitation by about 39 per cent.

" Well, Sir, sanitation is the most vital of all our problems. People must live before they can travel by railways or profit by them. In Bengal, malarial fever counts its victims by lakhs every year. We have had this terrible scourge in our midst for over 60 years. They have had it in other parts of the world; you have had it in England; they had it in Italy; they had it in Panama. Everywhere the problem has been solved; in India alone, I am sorry to have to say it, the problem remains unsolved. Am I to understand that British statesmanship—which, in the words of Lord Morley, has never been found wanting—is unable to cope with the situation? I do not and cannot accept this view. British statesmanship in this matter has not done justice to itself. British statesmanship in this matter has not roused itself to the gravity of the situation. It is wanting in that earnestness which is the essential condition of all statesmanship. You have provided 13 lakhs for next year for anti-malarial operations in Bengal. Of what avail would be 13 lakhs when crores are wanted? Then there is the plague which is always present with us, counting its victims by millions. Take again that terrible visitation of influenza which has exacted a toll of 5 millions of our population. Now, Sir, I want to put this question to the Hon'ble the Finance Minister—if ours was a national government—would this state of things have been allowed to continue for so long? You are moving, rapidly moving, if not in respect of your personnel, at any rate in respect of your ideals and aspirations, towards a national government. I invite my Hon'ble friend the Finance Minister to imagine for a moment that he was the Minister of a national government. Would he then hesitate to transfer a few millions from railways to this great Department upon which the health, the lives, the happiness and prosperity of millions of my countrymen so largely depend? I think not. Would he be jeopardising railway development if he were simply to transfer 2 or 3 millions from railways to this head? And after all the health of a people is their truest wealth, their most valuable asset, the indispensable equipment for industrial, political, social and all kinds of advancement.

“ Next to sanitation, I place education as its ally and helpmeet. For the ends of national advancement, for the advent of that era to which we are all looking forward, officials and non-officials alike, education is the one indispensable condition. If you want that responsible government should succeed, that we should build up an educated electorate, that we should train our young men to be the future captains of our industries, that our masses should be penetrated with sound sanitary ideas, education again is the one indispensable condition. Next to the maintenance of law and order, education is the first and foremost consideration of Government. The preservation of the public peace, Sir, is only a means to an end, and the end is always greater than the means. And what is the end? It is the happiness, the contentment of the people; their growing efficiency; their increasing responsiveness to their civic duties. I appeal to the Government of India to apply themselves to this exalted function, by making adequate provision for education and sanitation. My suggestion would be: Take away 5 millions from railways, give 3 millions to education and 2 millions to sanitation. My Hon'ble friend the Finance Minister has urged—I quote his own words—a ‘courageous outlay on the essentials of progress’. Could there be two more fundamental essentials of progress than sanitation and education? I appeal to him to stand by his own programme, to redeem it, to educate our people, to spread broadcast the blessings of health and happiness. The village homes of India have been depopulated by the prevalence of insanitary conditions. It is the supreme duty of the Government to restore happiness and contentment, health and prosperity, to them. I am sure my Hon'ble friend will realise the gravity of his responsibilities, when to him is entrusted the task of saving the lives of millions of our people and educating them as they desire and deserve to be educated to the height of their civic duties.”

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda :—“ Sir, the Hon'ble 12-35 P.M.
Sir James Meston is entering on his new official career with the blessings of at least 2½ lakhs of people, men with that modest fixed incomes who will be relieved of the liability to income-tax—a relief which will be greatly appreciated in these hard times; and on their behalf I wish to offer my most cordial thanks to him. Sir, to a Hindu like me, this is a happy augury, and I sincerely hope and trust that he will be able to go further in the same direction and before laying down the reins of his high office will be able to take off that obnoxious tax—the Salt Tax—which deprives the poor man of what is looked upon as a luxury but what is really a necessity of life.

“ Leaving on one side this pleasant aspect of the Budget, I must express my sense of disappointment at the Budget as a whole. The outstanding feature of the Budget is, to my mind, the colossal growth of expenditure, Civil and Military; a huge provision for Railways, and an absence of any generous measure of amelioration for the millions tottering under the weight of their utter economic helplessness. Sir, this is the first Budget after the War, and regard being had to the fact that very acute distress is prevailing in all parts of the country, regard being had to the fact that during the War restrictions had been placed on expenditure on all projects for the promotion of social and national progress, one expected to find some proof of the practical application of the dictum laid down by the Hon'ble the Finance Minister 'courageous outlay on the essentials of progress and a strict economy in all non-essentials.' ... But what do we actually find? We find civil and military expenditure mounted up to an almost giddy height. We find an almost fabulous provision for railways; but nothing worth mention for subjects like education, sanitation and medical relief. I ought to say, Sir, that we desire railway expansion. It is absolutely necessary as an adjunct to an era of industrial activity which we need for the good of the country, and especially for the easy and speedy transport of foodstuffs. But, Sir, the pace of railway development must not be disproportionately high, it must bear some proportion to the capacity of the country to afford this programme. Sir, it will be said that these are repetitions of old complaints. Well they are so, but is it our fault that we have to repeat these complaints year after year? Why do you not remove the cause of our complaints? Take, for instance, the question of medical relief and sanitation.

[Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda.]

"We heard the other day from the Hon'ble Sir C. Sankaran Nair and this statement is confirmed in the report on influenza which has just been published by the Sanitary Commissioner, Major Norman White. To quote his words 'without exaggeration the toll levied in British India alone by influenza is no less than five millions, and fifty to eighty per cent. of the whole population have been affected by it.' He says that 'this total is more than half the mortality from plague within the twenty years' that it has been our guest, and that fifty to eighty per cent. of the total population has been affected.' He further says:—'In many countries the epidemic assumed proportions of a national calamity; this was certainly the case in India. From the incomplete information at present available, it would appear that no country suffered as severely as did India during the last quarter of 1918.' Can anything be more appalling than this, Sir? What have you done to prepare the country, to arm the people better to meet epidemics and visitations like these in future? You have piled crores upon crores for civil and military expenditure and upon railway construction, but what have you done for health? It may be said, no doubt, quoting from the words of Major Norman White, that 'had we possessed health and medical organisations comparable in efficiency to those of the most progressive States in the world, we should even then have been unable to effect anything appreciable to check the ravages of the disease.' But he at the same time admits that our health organisation is absolutely inadequate and demands immediate expansion. What has been our experience during the epidemic? It was felt and realised everywhere that we could not get the smallest fraction of medical men required in the country. Speaking from my experience as chairman of one of the first class municipalities in Assam I say, Sir, that even in towns we could not get men with even moderate medical qualifications for the purpose of distributing medicines and reporting the progress of the disease although we offered tempting terms. How could it be otherwise? What is the position as regards the supply of medical men in the country? Take the case of Bengal, for instance, which has got the largest number of medical institutions, Government as well as private. In Bengal, the number of medical men with registrable qualifications is only some 3,000. What is this in a population of 45 millions? A mere drop in the ocean. Can this be at all a hopeful state of things? Where are the people in the rural areas, the poor people to go to when they require medical help? Who can tell the number of men who died for want of medical assistance? Well, Sir, this is the condition of the whole country, not in Bengal only. I believe, Sir, in the whole of India there are only five medical colleges and 15 other medical institutions. Is this at all adequate? The number of seats in the colleges is limited. I know that in the Calcutta Medical College they cannot admit more than one-tenth of the applications for enrolment.

[Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda.]

There is no reason to believe that the state of things in other Provinces is much better. Well, something must be done to remedy this. I would ask you to take steps for multiplying the supply of medical men. It is not necessary that you should supply highly qualified graduates; men with modest qualifications will do for the rural areas. In this connection, I must regret that the unanimous resolution of this Council passed in 1916 which had the approval of the late Sir Pardey Lukis and Sir Reginald Craddock to establish medical institutions in the whole of the country, to teach medicine in the vernacular, to turn out a large number of practitioners for rural areas, has not been given effect to. I respectfully urge, Sir, that the decision of the Government should be reconsidered. If that resolution had been carried out, I am sure that during the late epidemic we would have had a much larger number of men to assist us in the rural areas. Sir, it is a matter for regret that not only is there no substantial allotment for sanitation and health, but health is not even mentioned as one of the subjects for expenditure on which Local Governments are now permitted to draw on their cash balances, presumably on the ground that expenditure on health is not reckoned as remunerative. Is it necessary to point out the fallacy of this assumption? It has long been exploded in England. I do hope, Sir, that something will be done for this. I would suggest that you make a big cut, a big slice from the huge railway budget and distribute it on sanitation and education and other projects like these. Then, Sir, I must say that I am disappointed to find that there is no mention of or provision for industrial development. No doubt, you are perusing the report of the Industrial Commission and considering it; but while you are perusing and pausing and pondering valuable time is passing. The war came and is as good as gone, but we are still standing where we were, passive lookers-on, not passive resisters, in our utter helplessness and realise our absolute dependence on others, while our markets are being captured by other people because we are not prepared. I would suggest, Sir, that there ought to be some provision for industries, cutting it either from railway or military expenditure. The other day we were encouraged by the message of hope and sympathy which His Excellency as Chancellor of the Calcutta University delivered to us at the last Convocation. He said 'we do not want mere Indian capital. We want men and not Indian men only, as labour, but as leaders who will turn their attention to industrial enterprises and equip themselves for a great industrial regeneration in India.' Let not the hope which was raised be deferred and deferred till the heart becomes sick.

"Then there is no reference, Sir, to the acute distress which I have already said is prevailing in almost all parts of the country. Famine and scarcity are localised, confined to specified parts of the country, and we are grateful for the provision made for famine expenditure. But what about the distress caused to a much larger population by oppressively high and ruinous prices for almost every commodity? We will be grateful, Sir, if some of the more ambitious projects be cut down and the money diverted to some measures for alleviating the misery of these people.

"Then coming to the military expenditure we provide for 41½ millions, more than half the total revenue; deducting the special contribution of £8·7 millions, we find our ordinary expenditure is £32½ millions. There is an increase of 10 millions in four years, the expenditure in 1915-16 having been £22,261,353, and an increase of 13 millions over the Nicholson Committee's recommendations. Now this enormous sum of £32½ millions does not provide for any increase in the number of troops; the increase in expenditure is entirely due to increase of salaries and provision for equipment. I hope, Sir, that the Indian point of view will be realised, and that some portion of this increase will go to the Indian sepoy. It must be obvious that you cannot go on increasing military expenditure like this indefinitely without endangering the stability of the financial state of the country. In this connection, Sir, I would like to quote from a minute of Lord Mayo speaking about the increase of military expenditure:—'A single shilling taken from the people of India and spent unnecessarily on the Army is a crime against the people who need it for their moral and material development'. While on this point I must plead for some substantial increase in the number of commissions in the Army, and associate myself entirely with the remarks of the Hon'ble Mr. Banerjea and the Hon'ble Maharaja of Kasimbazar.

[Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda.]

"Now, taking the expenditure of the civil departments, we find an increase of 10 millions in ten years and $3\frac{1}{2}$ millions in a single year, the great bulk of it being due to increase in salaries. It was £20,855,868 in 1917-18 and it jumps up to £21,336,400. Can the country possibly bear this? What has been the growth in Revenue? Why, we had to increase the salt tax, increase the income tax, introduce a super tax, increase the customs duties, introduce a motor spirit tax which coming as a war measure, is to be retained for fiscal purposes. Then we are to have another tax. Then take the Railway programme. We are allotting $17\frac{1}{2}$ millions for capital outlay in addition to $6\frac{1}{2}$ millions for renewals from current revenue. Lord Inchcape's recommendation was for £12 $\frac{1}{2}$ millions annually. Now apart from the question of their relative importance as compared to other matters, protective irrigation for instance, there can surely be no question that regard being had to their character as a highly commercial success, there should be no objection to investment of money on railways. We desire expansion of railway construction, but you cannot indefinitely increase capital expenditure. Spend as much as you can borrow; use all your loan funds, but do not draw on any surplus from the current revenue. No doubt part of the surplus is due to income from railways, but even then you should not use the surplus from capital. That should be spent on non-recurring subjects like education and sanitation. My submission is to cut down the allotment for railways to the proceeds of the loan you intend raising. Lord Inchcape's Committee recommended an expenditure of £12 $\frac{1}{2}$ millions. While I am on this point, I should like to plead for 3rd class passengers. I must remind the Council of the answer the Hon'ble Sir Robert Gillan gave me about a year ago that when rolling-stock was increased, provision would be made for preventing over-crowding in 3rd class carriages. I trust we shall hear no more of 3rd class passengers being packed in goods wagons. I am sure such a state of things would not be tolerated elsewhere. I read only a fortnight ago that a number of passengers on a certain line were packed in a goods wagon which could not even be cleansed, with the result that some straw which was left on the floor caught fire and a number of passengers were injured when jumping from the moving train when the wagon was ablaze. Such scandals ought to be put a stop to.

"Then I come to the building of new Delhi. I know it is crying in the wilderness, or shall I say among the tombs in the desert of Raisina. What is the urgency of the work that 45 lakhs must be found for it, ignoring pressing necessities. Sir James Meston speaks of the new official capital; this I interpret as the new ceremonial capital. What is the urgency of the matter, when people are dying and cannot provide meals for themselves: when women are committing suicide for inability to cover their nudity for want of clothes? I repeat what is the urgency; if this could wait for eight years it surely could wait for another year at least? It reminds one of Lord Lytton's Durbar in 1877 when people were dying by lakhs for want of food during the Madras famine. I trust therefore that this item will be cut down.

"I have two submissions to make in connection with the Budget. We have seen how frightfully the expenditure is increasing. We see there is no further room for increasing the taxation; we must find money to carry on works of national importance requiring large sums of money and if we are not to commit national suicide. Our whole financial position will have to be looked into and systematically overhauled. This can only be done by an independent commission. I would urge that this matter receive consideration; it is more than 20 years since we had the last Commission which sat in 1897. I would submit this point for the consideration of Government. My second submission is this. At the present time we can only make general observations about the Budget because we do not know the details of the financial administration. Unless we are allowed better access to these, unless we have opportunities of scrutinising the materials on which the Budget is based, our criticisms cannot possess the value which they might otherwise have. My submission is that it is desirable to let us have such opportunities and, if necessary, to form small committees of additional Members. I do not advocate the formation of glorified so-called Finance Committees of Provincial Councils. Many of us have experience of such committees, and I do not know if any one's experience justifies the belief that anybody was wiser because of our association with the officials in such committees. I trust the matter will receive consideration. Finally, I must appeal to the Hon'ble the Finance Member to help us in the matter of the Government College at Sylhet which is long overdue. In 1916, we had an assurance from the Chief Commissioner that if we gave a contribution of Rs. 18,000, the College would be put on a proper footing. We hope now that the war is over that money will be forthcoming and that the Government will give us the necessary funds to put the College on a sound financial footing."

The Hon'ble Mr. W. A. Ironside:—" Sir, I greatly regret that there has been so little opportunity and time at my disposal during the last few days to give the care and attention that the Hon'ble the Financial Member's statement merits, and I consequently feel some diffidence in rising at all at this stage to make any general criticism of the main features of the Budget. However, the opinions that have been expressed by some Hon'ble Members this morning on the railway programme proposals have filled me, I assure you Sir, with amazement; the whole tone is seemingly to cut down the efficiency of one department irrespective of the results to the community at large in order that some other departments may benefit. Now, if we are to have a reduction in efficiency,—for that is what it amounts to,—of one department like the Railways, the whole future of the country is endangered, and I look to the railway programme as a vital necessity and it must be maintained at any cost. Some speakers have appealed for a reduction of the Railway Budget for other necessary projects, such as sanitation, medical relief and matters of that sort. I can give the assurance of the commercial community that there is nothing we feel affects the future of this country to an equal extent, but this can only be effectively done by finding money in other directions. The proposals we have heard to-day prove that the financial future of this country is to be one of extreme difficulty in all directions. We have appeals for increased expenditure, increased salaries, always demands for expenditure in one form or another, but, apparently except for this reduction in the vital chord of the economic future of the country, we have not had one concrete suggestion for finding the wherewithal to meet the position. I think that some of my friends who have spoken recently can have but little idea of the necessities of railways in India; for four years they have been maintained with the greatest difficulty. 'Make good, carry on as best you can,' has been the rule. 12-58 P.M.

"One has only to travel to see the state of the equipment; travel in the rains and the roofs of the carriages are leaking. Travel in the hot weather and the equipment as regards the electric fans is reduced by half. Everything is in a state, as one leading railway official put it to me the other day, 'my equipment is scarcely better than a scrap heap'; it is not fair to ask the railway administration to carry on, as it has been suggested, without the means of doing so with efficiency. Any lack of efficiency is immediately taken hold of and the Government is blamed for failure. Our friends cannot have their cake and eat it as well, and I can assure them that the lack of sufficient transport in India has been, in my opinion, and I know it is generally shared by anybody who has got any practical experience, the lack of sufficient transport has been the cause to a large extent, of the lack of progress in industrial and economic matters. Now leave industries altogether, leave the European merchant alone. We can scarcely move in an ordinary year the average crop of the country; you have only to travel in an ordinary year, north south, east or west, to see at the railway stations the hard-earned products of the soil lying rotting, waiting for transport which cannot be provided, and who are the people who suffer? Not the gentlemen who come here and appeal for Education and Sanitation, but the people who by the sweat of their brow provide those products and are waiting and are prevented from getting their due return for them. If there is anything that I have to say on the subject of this railway programme, it is the disappointment that it has not gone far enough. We have to make up four years' lee-away. I have already mentioned the fact of the equipment. But to make good that lee-way, to make good every locomotive and every piece of railway line, the Government will have to pay three times as much as they did in pre-war years and on the basis of which Lord Inchcape's Committee recommended 12 million sterling annually. I have only last week, sitting on the Board of a Railway, seen quotations for locomotives, the increase in price was 250 per cent. Yet in face of this fact gentlemen of this Council stand up and ask for still further reductions. It does seem to me, that they are not studying the interests of the people for whom they speak.

" But take another problem. You speak of the lack of industrial progress. I will give you one feature of it. Had we sufficient transport in Bihar and Orissa at the present moment, not from the fault of anybody except as a result of this war, we could employ thousands of people from the famine-stricken districts on very remunerative pay and get over a difficulty which is taxing the energies and wits of every Government official and everybody who has the welfare of the people at heart. I have only to suggest that the Hon'ble the Finance Member will in future bear this feature in mind. The railways cannot be starved. I do not think Sir James Meston will starve us simply in order to listen to clamour from other quarters. The transport of food-stuffs from one district to another has been during the past four years one of the most difficult problems that we have had to face, and it has taxed the energies and the brains of every man concerned. The money to be provided by the suggested loan is to be put to capital account, but the plant is going to cost three times, twice as much at any rate to be absolutely safe, twice as much as on the pre-war standard. The money, I presume, will be borrowed at 5½ per cent. and to make it a paying proposition to Government, the railways have got to show twice that amount of profit or more.

" Now speaking from the point of view of a commercial man, I think that we should have taken some of that capital in a year of stress out of revenue. I know I shall be accused of talking heresy to speak here of additional taxation, but one of my friends, I think, has described the Budget as ominous. It is ominous. We have now got to the length that we have got to face taxation and taxation has got to come, whether we like it or not, and every class of community must bear its share. The commercial community, I think, have borne their share, and now, I think, it is for other people to do something if we want progress. If we cut down the expenditure on railways to-day, you need not go any further with industrial progress, you need not give effect to any of the recommendations of the Industrial Commission, simply because the railways cannot carry beyond what they are already doing."

[At this stage the Council adjourned for Lunch.]

2-20 P.M.

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—" Sir, the Financial Statement as presented by the Finance Minister is, in my respectful opinion, nothing if it is not unsatisfactory. I say so with all the sense of responsibility of an Additional Member of this Council. I look at the Budget from the tax-payer's point of view, and what is that point of view? The tax-payer expects that a substantial if not a greater portion of the money that he pays should go towards the amelioration of his condition. Now consider for a moment what the pressing problems of this country are? Any one who goes about the country knows what they are. It requires no proof. The extreme poverty is one, the proverbial illiteracy is another, and the fearful mortality is the third. Now I put it to this Council to consider whether adequate provision has been made in the Budget to meet any of these pressing problems. We have the estimated revenue of £123 millions. In order to break illiteracy you should find some decent provision under the head of Education. In order to check poverty you would expect some adequate provision under the heads of Agriculture and Industry, for, in my opinion, without industrial development the poverty of the country will not vanish. And, thirdly, the high mortality could to some extent be remedied by appropriate provision under the heads of Sanitation and Medical. Now looking to the figures, Sir, you will find that out of this £123 millions, a provision of £4,884,900 is made for Education. Under the head of Medical you find a provision of £1,338,100. Under the head Sanitation £957,200, while under the head of Agriculture you have £101,600, and on Scientific and Miscellaneous, including Industrial, I understand, it is £665,700. All told it amounts to a magnificent provision of something over £8 millions out of £123 millions of the estimated revenue of this country. Now, is that an adequate provision, an appropriate provision, for meeting the pressing problems of the day? I say it certainly is not, while the rest of the revenue is distributed on military, railway, interest, posts and telegraphs, mint and the like. The main features of the Budget to my mind are, firstly, that the military expenditure has mounted up to double the pre-war figure. Now, with regard to this particular point, I may mention, as my Hon'ble friend Mr. Chanda remarked, that in 1914 or 1915 the provision on this head was £22 millions, and I find from the proceedings of the Council that my late Hon'ble friend Mr. Gokhale complained bitterly against a provision of even £14 or £16 millions under the head of Military. So practically one-third of the total revenue of India is budgetted for on account of the military expenditure of this country. Then the second important feature in the Budget is that no additional grants worth the name are sanctioned for Education and Sanitation. The third is that the outlay on Irrigation has been curtailed by £100,000. And the fourth is that railways, as has been remarked by so many Hon'ble Members, have come in for special favour, the allotment for capital outlay only being £17 millions and something more. This provision exceeds, in my humble opinion, the wildest dreams of the railway magnates themselves. The fifth is that to adjust the balance, it is proposed to raise a loan of 15 millions—not for the purpose of sanitation, not for the purpose of agriculture, not for the purpose of medical relief—but, as I put it, to adjust the balance. The last important feature is the absence of any provision whatsoever to carry out the recommendations of the Industrial Commission.

“ The only favourable feature of the Budget is the concession in regard to a certain class of income-tax payers. Barring that, the Budget, in my opinion, is as a whole highly disappointing. But before I close my observations, I should like to ask the Hon'ble the Finance Minister to give a word of explanation on two points. One is that a resolution in September last for a further contribution toward the war expenditure was passed, subject to the sanction of the two Houses of Parliament. During the debate on the Excess Profits Bill or in the Narrative presented by the Hon'ble the Finance Minister, we find not a word to suggest that that sanction has been obtained or not. One cannot be sure in these days of that sanction—particularly in view of numerous protests against the resolution of this Council in favour of any further contribution—so I should like to have a word of explanation on that. And, secondly, I have been reading recently in the newspapers that the Secretary of State has been pleased to sanction further increase in the emoluments of the Medical Service and, I believe, some other service—the Indian Police Service. Now I should like to know whether the provision that has been made under the head ‘Medical’ and under the head ‘Police’ includes provision for these increased salaries or not. I find nothing in the whole Narrative to show that the sanctioned increase has been provided for. If it has not been provided for, I should like to know whether it is proposed to do so and, if so, whether the Members of this Council would be given an opportunity to express their opinion on the proposals.

“ With these few words I resume my seat.”

[Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma.]

[7TH MARCH, 1919.]

2-30 P.M.

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—" Sir, this is the first time we meet after the conclusion of the war, and I may be permitted at the outset to congratulate His Majesty's Government and the Government of India on the happy and gloriously victorious termination of the war, and our cordial thanks are due to the Civil and Military officers of the Government of India, and to the Indian troops in particular, who have borne the heat of the day and have been successful in bringing credit to their country.

" I think it would be wrong to be hypercritical with a Budget framed under semi-war conditions, and it must be duly acknowledged that our new Finance Member has had a very hard task; he must have had a particularly hard task in inducing His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief to agree to a reasonable scale of military expenditure. But, however, that may be, our thanks are due to him for the courage with which he has given relief to the middle class tax-payer by raising the minimum of income-tax. We have also reason to congratulate him upon provision being made for ascertaining the water-power resources of the country and for the sugar bureau which has been started. It augurs well for the industrial development of the country.

" I am one of those who believe in a very rapid railway expansion of the country, and in expansion being necessary to open up vast tracts of country which at present are absolutely untilled, uncultivated, and are waiting for the hand of man. I, therefore, congratulate the Hon'ble Member upon the foreshadowing of a large expansion of railway activity; but I deeply regret that side by side with this rapid development of railway activity, the Government of India has not been able to find money for irrigational expansion. It is absolutely necessary that we should have more food, that we should have more staples of commerce, if our railways are to be useful; and I hope, therefore, that equal attention will be paid to irrigation. A good deal of criticism has been levelled at the railway provision in the Budget, and I myself have given notice of a Resolution that the expenditure should be reduced by 5 millions. I hope to be able to meet that position to-morrow when that Resolution comes on; but having regard to the remarks which have fallen from the Hon'ble Mr. Ironside, I feel it absolutely necessary to deal with its main outlines at the outset.

" Sir, after due allowance is made for the desire of the Government of India to make up the arrears of the last few years, it cannot but be regretted that they have paid undue attention to this sphere of activity. What are the facts? We find that the total amount of money spent so far upon rolling-stock has been, up till now, about 61 crores, excluding, I think, minor railways and the Bengal Nagpur Railway, for which I have not been able to find figures. What do we ask for now? About 17 crores is proposed to be spent this year on rolling-stock alone, or about 25 per cent. increase in one year. Having regard to the total amount spent upon this one branch of railway activity since the beginning of the railway system, I would ask is there any necessity for it? I hope to receive an answer to that question. I know that some railway systems have been cruelly starved, including the Madras and Southern Mahratta Railway system, which had only 97 lakhs to show against 61 crores, and we feel the effects thereof every day. But all the same when we are speaking of all India, it is necessary for the Government to show why they want so much as 26 crores plus 9 crores shown under working expenses, but which is really capital expenditure; that is, our real Budget would be about 36 crores of rupees. Now, let us see if there is any justification for this? It has been said there is an enormous expansion of railway traffic. True, but under abnormal circumstances. I find—I hope I shall be corrected if my figures are wrong—I find on turning to the statistics of 1917-18 that the total carriage of goods on all railways in 1913-14 was only 82,662,000 as against 85,766,000—that is, there has been an expansion of about 3 per cent., while the principal commodities were nearly the same about 67.4 million tons. I find where the difficulty comes in; the difficulty is that whereas in 1913-14 the average length which a ton of goods went was 185 miles, on account of war contingencies the same ton of goods had to be carried 245 miles and hence all our trouble. Therefore the reform should be in the direction of pooling the resources, if possible, and trying to reduce by means of expansion of the shipping traffic if necessary the need for carrying goods over such an enormous length. Again, I submit that the total train mileage which was 156,276,000 miles in 1913-14 was only 157,036,000 miles last year and that there has been really no growth in the total mileage that has been run by these railways. I have not taken the Government railways separately. If these facts are in the main correct, it would seem that there does not seem to be such a vast necessity for improvement in that direction, but for a reorganisation if necessary. But I think as a layman most of these inferences may be wrong, and I therefore make these statements with due timidity, and I hope that there may be an explanation given in respect of these matters.

"Again, Sir, what does the Railway department propose to do? They propose to clear the arrears of four years virtually. In 1913-14 and 1914-15, there used to be an expenditure of about 14 crores or £10 millions roughly each year; that is, 60 crores would have been the proper item in four years; we spent only 25 crores, therefore 35 crores have to be made up and it is proposed to make it up this year by 20 crores treating the current expenditure as 15. I respectfully ask as to whether it is not a very ambitious programme, especially having regard to the fact that we are in very unsettled trade conditions and we shall purchase possibly for a rupee one-third of what might have been purchased prior to the war. Therefore, I think, it is false economy in a year of high prices and unsettled trade to embark upon such enormous railway expenditure. May I also respectfully put another question, whether the Government of India might not have foreseen this expenditure? We know that waggons are being built in India. What steps have been taken during the last four years to foresee the enormous expansion that would be necessary to meet India's needs after the war in the way of the development of our existing waggon building resources? I would like to have an answer to that question because it is being said, and unless justified, I think, rightly, that the Government of India wish to meet the trade difficulties in England in putting such large orders, whereas an expansion of irrigation activity would not help the trade. I have read that in current literature. This sort of criticism is being levelled; I think it is unjust criticism and that the Government of India would be able to answer that criticism.

"Well, Sir, to pass from railways, this Budget may be characterised as being an orthodox army-railway-service Budget. I will first deal with the revenue head before I go to the expenditure side. I gave notice last year and the year before and this year of a Resolution to raise the duty on beer. It is 1a. 6p. a gallon in India, whereas it ranges from 7a. 6p. to Rs. 2 4a. in England, £1 5s. to £5 per 36 gallons I think. If, therefore, we increase our customs duty on beer we can expect an increase of revenue of about 30 lakhs, and I hope, therefore, that the Government will, unless there are very grave reasons to the contrary, see their way to bring this customs duty into line with what obtains in the United Kingdom. It may be that it is feared that the soldier would be hit hard, but we must remember that the soldiers' emoluments and the officers' emoluments have been enormously increased and brought into line with what they are in the United Kingdom, and I therefore see no reason for any objection being validly raised on that account in the future.

"Then the other item is with regard to opium. I received a telegram as I was coming that the Government of India has been unnecessarily sacrificing revenue. It may be that the telegram is an idle one and that there is absolutely nothing in it. It says that the price of opium in China is several times—fifteen times, though this may be a gross exaggeration—of what it obtains in India. If so, I hope that the Government of India will try to secure a better opium revenue, and estimate it at a higher figure than what is to be found in the Budget.....

The Hon'ble Sir James Meston :—"Will the Hon'ble Member kindly tell me the name of the sender of that message?"

[Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma.]

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma :—“ ‘ Limping Khaki ’. I am sure the Hon'ble the Finance Member would be only too careful to indulge in any unnecessary sacrifice of revenue, but in order to reassure the public that everything is being done I have ventured to make this statement. Of course, Government have entered into a contract for future deliveries and there may be no possibility of extracting a larger revenue under that head.

“ Coming to Customs, may I make a remark. Possibly there may be an explanation. The estimates foreshadow the prohibition of silver imports and also perhaps of gold. I think these artificial restrictions and limitations will still further complicate the currency problem, are opposed to Indian interests and I hope they will be removed.

“ The few observations that I have to make with regard to expenditure would be that, with regard to the Army, we may have a clearer statement in future as to the various heads under which there has been increase which a layman can understand. I find that under the head ‘ Miscellaneous ’ in 1913-14 we had only 28 lakhs; it went up to 33 crores last year and it is 21 crores this year. It is a sink into which anything can be dropped without anybody observing it, and I hope that in future the details of the miscellaneous expenditure will be explained and that they would be arranged under some other head. It seems to me, Sir, that we should as soon as possible revert to a normal rate of expenditure, and if the League of Nations is to be worth the scrap of paper on which it may be written, we hope to see large reductions in the military expenditure. I see that my optimism in the matter is to a certain extent justified inasmuch as Mr. Winston Churchill hopes that the decisions of the League of Nations will enable the reduction of the British garrison in India. We find that with a diluted currency in Europe very large salaries and emoluments have to be paid to the Britisher; we cannot hope to get the article cheaper; and when that is so, I think it is our imperative duty having regard to Indian poverty to reduce the British garrison and improve the status, pay and position of the Indian soldier and the Indian officer. On this point I may be permitted to refer to just one observation of the Hon'ble the Finance Member that we should remember that we do not make any very large contribution to the Navy. May I say, Sir, that so long as we are merely exporters of raw produce and importers of manufactured goods and our goods are carried in foreign vessels, there is no meaning in saying that our commerce is protected by the navy. Goods are brought to our shores by people who wish to sell them, and I do hope that there would not be any talk of the navy protecting our commerce so far as this aspect of the question is concerned and indirectly raising the military expenditure and military demands on the Indian Empire.

“ I may also add that the loyalty of India during a period of great crisis shows that there is not the slightest need for panic and that the Government of India can carry on the administration with a very small British garrison and that peace can be kept. In these circumstances, the burden of carrying on an eastern Empire should not be placed indirectly on India. The Hon'ble the Finance Member has treated this as a transitional year and avoids the obligations of both the old and the reform régimes. Under the old or the existing régime care was taken to limit military expenditure at least within the limits of land revenue and to provide even to some limited extent out of the Imperial share for education and sanitation and such other objects. Under the new reform proposals approved by everybody the provincial revenue would have been improved by 201 lakhs plus 164 lakhs, or 375 lakhs in all. The normal growth in land revenue and court-fees, judicial and excise, together with 201 lakhs minus income tax would have brought about the result. That surplus is now absorbed in Imperial expenditure. The true Imperial surplus has been ignored, it would be nearly 1·3 millions under the reform proposals, even with the present large military expenditure. We hope that the expenditure will not be larger than £25 millions, and that several millions would be available under the true Imperial head for productive expenditure. This year I find that 180 lakhs have been taken for demobilization charges and 120 railway capital expenditure met from revenue. This will work out that more than 10 crores railway expenditure are being met from revenue. I am not criticising that as bad policy in a year of semi-war activity, but I think this should be borne in mind. My remarks are made with a view to a proper distribution of burdens as between the Imperial and Provincial Exchequers. •

“The provision for unconsidered, unapproved heads under the head of unforeseen contingencies sins against the true canons of correct budgetting, e.g., in military expenditure and otherwise, such items have been provided for. This prevents the need for future consultation let alone approval; supplementary budget provision should be resorted to if necessary; such contingent provision is unnecessary with the introduction of the treasury bill and currency credit manufacturing systems. The treasury bill system is liable to grave abuse unless immediate legislative control is provided for. The omission to provide for the Sinking Fund with the £100 millions contribution for which special provision was made in taxation Acts is a grave departure from correct methods, whatever may have been the need for such omission; the omission violates the spirit of legal enactments imposing taxation. I realise that it is not usual to earmark revenue. The centre of Indian finance must be Delhi, future obligations should be discharged only here even assuming the possibility of friction and inconvenience in the initial stages; stores and supplies should be deliverable and payable here. The trade returns testify to the large excess of exports over imports; the growth and volume of imports can be regulated as has been done in the interests of the nation, as has been done by all nations, and there is no need for the location of the gold standard reserve in London. Its extent should be inquired into; the reserves must fructify Indian trade and meet Indian commercial monetary needs. Silver needed for currency should be purchased in India. The silver currency coined during the last few years amounting to 120 crores, is costing the people $6\frac{2}{3}$ crores at $5\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. and economy could easily have furnished supplies for education and sanitation. We are moving further away from the gold currency and possibly a gold standard, and we shall have to adopt the recommendation of the British Currency Commission. Silver tokens should be legal currency only up to a certain limit; at any rate the problem should be considered with a view to meet Indian susceptibilities and prejudices. We have expanded the currency based on British credit, the problem of expanding Indian credit based on India's resources must be thought out. Just as Railways were built with borrowed resources, so should the schemes of sanitation and education be financed if necessary. The loss of 2 per cent. of the population owing to influenza means when capitalized at the low figure of Rs. 60 per head per annum the loss of 600 crores. Land, opium, salt, forests, water, railways have been nationalised, so should marine and aerial shipping. I strongly plead for the nationalisation of Indian shipping, because there seems to be no other chance of getting Indian shipping. It is a sad commentary on our existing system of government that the growth of shipping in all countries except our own should be regarded with equanimity. The Budget should have provided for State insurance of Indian shipping. This is the duty of Government.....

The Hon'ble the Vice-President:—“I must remind the Hon'ble Member that he has spoken for 25 minutes already.”

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—“I shall conclude in two minutes. The passage in paragraph 8 of the Narrative foreshadows a policy of Imperial preference. India should be recognised as a separate nation in the same sense as the self-governing dominions are among the League of Nations, and should have similar fiscal freedom of action. The consequences would otherwise be disastrous. The London Chamber's recommendations of revenue duties up to 20 per cent. at least should be clearly recognised. Imperial preference would mean costlier imports and less money for exports. That would be the real meaning of that. I hope that will be realised and that India's battle will be fought out before the League of Nations and before the British Cabinet I hope the same delicacy will be observed by other countries with regard to Indian industrial development. Our industrial condition has never been good and it is woefully backward.

[Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma ; The Vice-President ; [7TH MARCH, 1919.]
Mr. K. V. Rangaswamy Ayyangar.]

" I have only one word to plead for Madras. We find that wheat and rice are selling in parts of Madras much dearer than in England. I had to buy wheat at 3 lbs. per rupee whereas in England it is cheaper according to the statistics that have been furnished to me. I hope, therefore, the Food Controller, if he is still to be retained, and the Railway Department will see that we get at least enough to eat. I know personally that in some places rice is not to be had and has to be doled out in very small quantities even when the money is forthcoming. This is a very serious matter. The Madras Government's proposals with regard to famine conditions and the Government of India's proposals in the Budget seem to ignore it altogether, and it is my duty to warn Government against the grave crisis impending in Madras. I have not recommended any reduction of taxation, simply because I hope that the extra resources would be utilised in meeting the educational and sanitary needs of the country. The Budget demonstrates, Sir, the imperative need for larger imagination in the statesmanship employed in the Government of India. The recognition that the machinery has become inefficient, is unfitted for future needs that the margin of efficiency is too narrow to carry the burden of coming years is necessary for progress.....

The Hon'ble the Vice-President :—" I must remind the Hon'ble Member that he has greatly exceeded the two minutes he asked for."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma :—" I pray, therefore, for greater co-operation between the Government and the people in order that we may carry the common burden upon our shoulders with greater ease and freedom."

2-58 P.M.

The Hon'ble Mr. K. V. Rangaswamy Ayyangar :—" Sir, I submit that my speech may be taken as read."

The Hon'ble the Vice-President :—" Mr. Ayyangar's speech may be taken as read."

The Hon'ble Mr. K. V. Rangaswamy Ayyangar :—
 " My Lord, the first noticeable item of the Budget is the excess profits tax. During 1917 we were assured that the 100 millions would be the ultimate contribution from India. We believed it. Then we were told our frontiers were in danger and only if the war continued, the Government would require another 45 millions. We believed it. Another assurance was that if famine conditions prevailed there would be no contribution. This also we believed. The war has ceased, famine conditions exist all through the country, there comes now the excess profits tax. It is not a war profits tax, peace having come; and retrospective taxation would be against all established principles. The industries utilised by the Government for supplying the materials of war have, it would appear, an undeniable claim on the support of Government, and should be generously encouraged at least to ensure future co-operation if not to repay obligation. If these industries are relieved of their legitimate gains now, as proposed under the excess profits tax scheme, future co-operation may be gravely endangered, whereas the abandonment of this objectionable feature is sure to lead to the most desirable results. What a soldier did to win the war by his physical work the industries have done in other ways. There should be no invidious distinction between those who co-operated with the Government in winning the war. As it is, it appears, that you give with one hand and that you take away with the other. The industries and the upper classes have been subjected to progressive income-tax, the super-tax, the imposition of railway surcharge, an all-round import duty and special export duties as on tea, jute, etc., and the imposition of controlled rates. Would the Government care to share the loss, if it proposes to share the profits to sustain the principle of quasi-partnership? The very people who are proposed to be taxed also lost very heavily this year, and to ask the losers to pay the excess profits duty from what they earned once appears to be very cruel indeed. Unless their plants are seized the collection of excess profits tax would hardly be accomplished. The last Industrial Conference held during the Congress week was guided by men of sound sense and sober views, and in their considered judgment this tax would be a death-blow to the native industries. Will the Railway companies be taxed since they have profited much and expended little? They have earned a good deal owing to increased railway freights. Again, should not holders of war bonds be taxed, because instead of a $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. interest which they would have been getting ordinarily, they are getting nearly 6 per cent. and these are also exempted from income-tax? The principle of excess profits tax does not seem to be based on equity, but only on the idea of taking money from where it is found. The Government, one fears, are unconsciously training the people in the present day Russian ways by their hostile attitude towards the wealthier classes of India. I have urged this point whenever the Government introduced such measures as the super-tax and the income-tax with proportional rates. I fear the Government are sowing the seeds of socialism all too unconsciously, and I shudder to think of the harvest we shall have to reap one day. Avoid the wind if one would rather not raise the whirlwind.

[Mr. K. V. Rangaswamy Ayyangar.]

Railways.

"Then the only alternative for the Government to save the country from the excess profits tax will be to reduce expenditure on some of the extravagant items. In this respect, the item that appears prominently in the Budget is the heavy allotments to railways. This may be reduced by 3 millions for this year and 3 millions for the next year. I consider this item to be wholly extravagant, for the existing railway companies do not appear to be constituted in the interests of indigenous industries, and the Government has hardly shown a sympathetic attitude towards the newly started railway companies managed by Indians. I know of a case in Southern India where some enterprising people started a concern, collected funds, and purchased rolling-stock for the purpose of working a line which was ready for the object and for which the foreign company which had constructed it for the District Board could not find the necessary rolling-stock. The District Board sanctioned the working of it by the indigenous railway company, but when everything was ready, the Railway Board refused sanction. The Indian company had to suffer heavy loss thereby, though it has been promised that their claims will be considered after the war is over. They have to wait and see what treatment will be accorded to them at the hands of the Government now. In such cases Government should readily come to the help of the people who have funds ready at their disposal to work out branch lines, and during these days when war loans have to be pumped up at a pressure, the Government will be strengthening their hands also by taking in the funds so willingly contributed by these branch line promoters. In the small concern I have mentioned above too many precautions and safeguards were placed in the way, alleging that it was only for the benefit of the company that the working was not sanctioned. Had sanction been then accorded, we should have found now a line well managed by Indians, and it is highly probable that the enterprise would have encouraged further ventures in the direction of railway enterprise. Though the spirit of enterprise has been damped for the present, it is not too late to rectify matters and resuscitate the said company by sanctioning the working of the said line by them, thus providing a channel for their idle capital which can be utilised for this purpose of the State. Now it is generally believed that railways are extravagantly financed while irrigation works are strangled.

Irrigation.

"Important irrigation schemes do not receive the attention from the Government which they deserve. The one item of the irrigation project—particularly concerning my division—is the Cauvery reservoir project enumerated in paragraph 67 of the Narrative of the Hon'ble the Finance Member's Financial Statement. He says that the project remained under the consideration of the Government of India. By that I take it that the scheme has gone out of the hands of the Government of India having been sanctioned. But it is a pity no allotment has been made. It is not only intended to store water for more cultivation, but they provide for the complete control of the present fluctuating supplies of the Cauvery Delta system. After the award in favour of the Mysore Government as regards the arbitration in the Kannambady project, this Metur project was urged as the most important and urgent item by the inhabitants in the Cauvery Delta: and no relief has yet come to them. Had the Government only cared for the improvement of irrigation, they would not have been faced with such an appalling distress as the present famine. Even if the rate of return by the outlay on irrigation be less than that of the railways, the enormous outturn on raw produce will immensely benefit the people.

Famines.

“It is very unfortunate that the country is now experiencing one of the severest famines. Even after passing away of 6 millions of men from influenza, it is strange that the country should not be able to sustain the surviving population. It is a wonder that it could not protect even the depleted population. The ravage of influenza was considered to be one of the most calamitous scourges, but now after the appearance of famines, that fell disease is perhaps to be considered a dispensation by some hand to limit the ravages of famines in India and abroad. Had some consideration and restraint been observed in the rash export of food-stuffs from India, the extent of devastation by the famines might have been limited. That the richest of agricultural countries should not be able to feed its own population is an irony of fate, a parallel to which would be hard to find. A slight delay in monsoon drives the people to death. And when is the Government going to save and protect the population by prohibiting the exports of food-stuffs when it is so much needed for the producers? And when is the Government going to change their existing policy in the matter of showing economy in extending the irrigation schemes? These famines do not testify to the good administration of India and honest handling of her resources.

Taxable minimum raised to two thousand.

“One innovation in this Budget is the remedying of the long-pressed-for reform by the vociferous section, that is raising of the taxable minimum from R1,000 to 2,000. Though this subject has been a plank in the platform of the Congress for a long time, it does not appeal to me as there are the poorer people whose relief should claim the attention of the Government before the urgings of the classes whom this measure seeks to relieve. To be sure one whose income per month is between 80 and 160 is by far richer than the agriculturists whose average income is not above R80 to 160 a year. Had the Government first sought to remit in this famine year the agricultural rental to the raiyats whose income is not even a 12th or a 20th of those income-tax-payers. I would have hastened to congratulate the Hon'ble the Finance Member on his Budget. This measure seems to be designed to relieve mostly the Government employes whose remuneration should have been otherwise increased had not this measure been passed. It is obvious that no relief is provided for the classes which richly deserve it, and one attempt is made to appeal to the imagination of a limited number of literate persons.

Salt.

“One of the ways that will really lighten the burden of all classes is the abolition of the salt duties. Last year too I pointed out that the Government, by adopting auction sales, were consciously inflating the prices of salt far beyond the monopoly that is due to them. What is the use of supplying an eye-wash by establishing depôts in stray municipal areas for selling the commodity at lower prices when the price of salt is inflated in other ways. The bulk of the people will have to pay the inflated prices. I once more appeal to the Council that it should not adopt the ways adopted for purposes of liquor shops by auctioning the sales of stock at the hands of the Government.

Currency.

"In the matter of currency we should have given consent to unlimited issue of currency had the reserve fund held been invested in Indian Banks to go to help Indian industries. In other countries currency reserve funds are held within their territories and go to help their own industries. In the absence of such a system we should say 'thus far shalt thou go and no further.' Here then I cannot brush aside the threat contained in the Finance Member's statement in paragraph 74 which forebodes that on some future date the passing of some such Ordinance, as a year ago was in existence in Straits Settlements (which provided that currency notes were not sure to be encashed) will become inevitable. By such a measure the people will lose all confidence in the Government, and I have to warn the Council against it before any action is contemplated in that direction. In fact I apprehend undesirable results will follow even by the publication of such a hint.

Third war loan.

"Even last year I had to risk the displeasure of the Finance Member for suggesting to him to postpone the issue of the second war loan to a more suitable occasion. I, therefore, to be consistent, should object to this loan coming as it is in the most unfavourable circumstances. But the fact that this loan is raised only to pay off former debts causes me not to raise my finger against it. This means that the money is changing hands only. I should not at the same time keep quiet without placing my honest views before the Council, that no more amount than is required to pay off past loans need be taken from the investors. In these days of famines and the high cost of living, every cautious measure should be adopted in the matter of loans that are to be floated. The percentage is already high, and I agree with the Finance Member when he says that 6 per cent. interest on loans is an unreasonable amount for the Government of India. The Government paying the interest in currency notes will find it easy to pay higher interest, while the inflation of the rate will seriously handicap industries and other concerns.

Temple allowance.

"Before concluding I cannot but insist on my old old demand of the refund of temple allowance. I was asked by the Hon'ble the Home Member to refer the matter to the Local Government, and one of my friends, the Hon'ble the Raja of Ramnad, put an interpellation there, to which the reply was they had no details on hand. I have been repeating my complaint in this matter for the last three years, and since the Government will be only doing a bare justice by the refund of the temple properties appropriated by them—I should say misappropriated—I would request an allotment in the Budget for the refund of their dues.

 Transfer of heads.

"Then I have to bring to the notice of the Council two of the items in the Budget that should have come under different heads. Under land-revenue item the purchase of land in the United Provinces for rewarding Indian soldiers who have distinguished themselves in the war comes to 5.25 lakhs. This should not be under the head expenditure on land-revenue. Will it not be more appropriate to put it under Military expenditure? Then in another instance in the matter of general administration 1.32 lakhs comes under cost for advertising Indian war loan. The advertisement effects much change in the policy of the paper, and so I would advise that a portion of this sum may be placed under the heading 'department political' that subsidises papers.

[Mr. K. P. Rangaswamy Ayyangar ; Sir G. B. H. Fell.] [7TH MARCH, 1919.]

"Before concluding my speech, I should like to place a suggestion before this Council, and it is that the Government of India be requested to convey India's thanks to Lord Reading, as well as to the Government of the United States of America, for arranging to place an appreciable quantity of silver at our disposal at a time of crisis."

2-59 P.M.

The Hon'ble Sir G. B. H. Fell:—"Sir, I should like, with your permission, to intervene for a few minutes in this discussion in order to comment on certain aspects of the Financial Statement, relating to military expenditure, which have been the subject of comment by previous speakers. I need not detain the Council with any general remarks upon the high level of military expenditure, because in the first place that matter was dealt with in the speech of the Hon'ble the Finance Member introducing the Financial Statement, and in the second place, as almost every speaker has recognised, the time has not yet come for a reduction in the scale of our military expenditure. As my Hon'ble friend Mr. Surendranath Banerjea put it, the conditions are not yet normal; and he gave utterance to a sentiment, which I feel sure will be echoed by every Indian non-official Member of this Council, namely, that no educated Indian will grudge the military expenditure which is incurred for the safety of India and for the safety of the Empire with which India is so closely bound up. The time has not yet come for the recommendations of the Peace Conference to have a practical effect on our scale of military expenditure in India; and it is unlikely that the military advisers of the Government of India would ever care to rely, as the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma has suggested, on the efficacy of the League of Nations to safeguard our relations with our turbulent friends across the frontier.

"My Hon'ble friend Mr. Banerjea very naturally called attention to one particular feature of our military expenditure, both in the current year and in the next year, namely, the bonus granted to British soldiers of all ranks; and he said he would be glad to have some details with regard to that item. Well, Sir, as this Council is aware, in all matters relating to the emoluments of British soldiers in India, we merely comply with whatever scale may be in force in the rest of the Empire. And in order to appreciate the significance of this bonus, I think it is necessary to glance at the conditions with which His Majesty's Government found themselves faced on the signing of the Armistice. When hostilities terminated on the Western front, perhaps somewhat sooner than had been generally anticipated, the whole of the manhood of the British Empire was in arms, all except those who were wounded or injured, or were too old or infirm, and those who were employed on other work of national importance. His Majesty's Government, then, found themselves confronted with two problems—firstly the problem of how to retain an army sufficient to maintain our strength during the troublous period of peace negotiations; secondly, the problem of how to demobilise those men who were in excess of our requirements. There was a natural desire on the part of the large number of men who were not soldiers by choice of profession to return as soon as the fighting ceased to their homes and to their natural pursuits; and that desire perhaps was accentuated by the knowledge that industrial wages were already very high and were likely to go higher, and by the fear that if they did not get home at once, others might secure the places which they coveted. Consequently, His Majesty's Government decided to select a certain number of men, chiefly from the younger men and from those who had rendered less army service than the others, to be retained in military service in order to fill the active ranks of the army during this period, that is to form the armies of occupation on the Rhine and in the North and in other theatres, as well as the garrisons of the United Kingdom and India. To these men, they felt that some pecuniary compensation was due for the special demands made on them. Consequently, they decided to grant them, as a temporary measure, increased emoluments in the form of a war bonus, which is the point about which my Hon'ble friend Mr. Banerjea has inquired. This bonus is granted to all British ranks forming the armies of occupation and the garrisons of the United Kingdom and India, with effect from the 1st of February 1919.

[Sir G. B. H. Fell.]

"Then, as regards the problem of demobilising the others, there are obvious difficulties in getting rid of four or five million men at once. They can only be demobilised subject to the limitations imposed by the capacity of the steamers and the railway services to take them back to their own homes and by the time it takes to settle up their accounts. Consequently, with regard to this class, that is the men whom the military authorities no longer required and wished to demobilise, they decided to grant, not a bonus on the same scale as was granted to the men retained in the armies of occupation and the garrisons, but a bonus on a lower scale. This lower scale is, however, to come into operation on the 1st of May 1919, instead of the 1st February, and we have again this difference, that it is not paid as it accrues but is paid in arrears on the men's release from military service.

"Now, it is clear that the problem in India is in some ways quite different from that which confronted the Government in the United Kingdom. In India we have men in territorial and garrison battalions many of whom have been here for over four years; and they naturally hoped and expected that they would go home very shortly after hostilities ceased. Owing, however, to the shortage of shipping and other difficulties, it will not be possible to relieve all these men before the hot weather begins, and it becomes impossible to transport troops through the Red Sea. Consequently, the War Office bonus scheme has been applied to India with this difference, namely, that such men of the British Army as are in India at the end of the present trooping season, and have not been sent home before the hot weather, will all be treated as forming part of the garrison in India, whether definitely selected for retention in military service or not, and will receive the full bonus with retrospective effect from the 1st February, and not only from the 1st May.

"So much with regard to the bonus, which, of course, has added a very large burden to our military Budget, both this year and next year.

"The Hon'ble Mr. Banerjea, after referring to the bonus to British troops, went on to remind the Council that he has more than once pleaded for a substantial increase to the emoluments of the Indian Army. I may be wrong, but I had the impression that he was connecting the two matters; and suggesting that, as we were being very liberal to the British soldier, we should be equally liberal to the Indian sepoy. The circumstances, as I will endeavour to show, are quite different; but I should like, at the risk of wearying the Council, just to sketch briefly some of the improvements which have been effected in the emoluments and conditions of service of the Indian Army since the outbreak of this great war. The first step taken was to examine the pension rules. The wound and injury pensions were admittedly inadequate, and before many months were over, they had been substantially increased. I will not trouble the Council with the details; they are available for anyone who likes to examine them; but I might mention that in some cases the pensions were raised by 100 per cent. Then, too, the ordinary pensions were raised. Formerly a man had to serve at least 18 years to get an ordinary, as distinct from an invalid, pension; now the sepoy can obtain a full ordinary pension and at a higher rate after 15 years' service. Very early in the war, the Government of India recognised that the Indian Army was taking part in operations and serving in campaigns such as it had never been dreamed before would fall to its lot. It had never been contemplated that our sepoys would be fighting in Europe, in unfamiliar surroundings, in circumstances of great danger, great difficulty and great hardship under appalling climatic conditions and so on; and so the Government of India, with the approval of the Secretary of State, granted to all troops serving on the Western front a special field batta of 25 per cent. of their pay, with effect from the beginning of the war. Later, that batta was extended, though in a somewhat modified form, to all Indian troops serving in other spheres of war, with the result that every sepoy in these theatres, in addition to ordinary batta, receives Rs. 2 a month special batta.

"The next stage came in the beginning of 1917. Throughout the preceding year there had been discussions about what should be done to improve the conditions of service of the sepoy. The Government of India were at first disposed to recommend an increase of pay. Later they decided that the benefit could be given in a more convenient form and with no less advantage to the sepoy by the grant of free rations, and as this Council is aware, free rations were given to all ranks of the Indian Army with effect from the 1st January 1917. Then, again, the pay of the higher ranks of the Indian Army, above the sepoy, was also raised with effect from that date. I may mention that the cost of the grant of free rations to the combatant ranks of the Indian Army alone added 60 lakhs, or £400,000 a year to the military charges, at the time they were granted. At the present time I should think the cost is at least 50 per cent. higher. The sepoy, of course, does not suffer in the least from a rise in prices as he gets free rations.

“ At the same time the field batta (not the special batta to which I have just referred) was increased, in the case of the sepoy, from Rs. 1-8 a month to Rs. 5 a month; so that a sepoy got in addition to his pay and free rations not only that Rs. 5 but either 25 per cent of pay in the West, or Rs. 2 a month in Mesopotamia and other war theatres. Then, in June 1917 a recruiting bonus was given of Rs. 50 a month. That, of course, was a temporary measure, undertaken with the object of attracting recruits; but it must be taken into consideration in estimating what advantages the sepoy of the Indian Army has received since the war began. Similar recruiting bonuses were also granted to the Transport drivers and to men of the Army Bearer Corps. Then, again, a year later, in June 1918, further concessions were given, which took the form, not of an increase to the recruiting bonus, but of a gratuity of Rs. 15 to each sepoy on completing his recruit's course. That had the double advantage, firstly of attracting men to enlist and secondly, of inducing them to become efficient in the shortest possible time, which was a matter of the greatest importance at that time. At the same time, there was sanctioned for the whole Indian Army, for new and old soldiers alike, a special war bonus which, in the case of the sepoy, represents Rs. 24 for every six months' service, paid in arrears, or Rs. 4 a month. So that when we are considering the question of the war bonus recently given to the British Army, I should like the Council to realize that a war bonus was given to the Indian Army long before it was given to the British Army.

“ Again, in the case of the non-fighting men, considerable improvements have been effected. For instance, I have already mentioned that free rations were given to combatants; they have also been extended to certain transport personnel, mainly mule drivers, and to men of the Army Bearer Corps and Ordnance lascars. The pay of the Army Bearer Corps has been increased; so has the pay of animal transport drivers. The pay of the lowest grade of military sub-assistant surgeons has been increased from Rs. 35 to Rs. 60 a month. I will not weary the Council with an account of what was done for other non-combatant classes, the various so-called followers, menials, etc., all of whom have received very substantial increases of pay since the war began.

“ Another direction in which the lot of the Indian soldier has been very much improved has been in respect to his clothing. The system hitherto in force was for Government to pay a certain sum of money to the regiment when a man enlisted, and this sum was supposed to provide him with all his kit,—his clothing, uniform and so on; and he got in addition a small quarterly allowance for its maintenance. As soon as war conditions began to affect prices, Government recognised that this might be hard upon the sepoy; and so, in the first place, they allowed all these requirements to be supplied from the Army Clothing factories at pre-war rates, so that the recruits should not suffer from the rise in prices. Later on, they substituted a system of free issues of clothing for the system of kit money, and latterly, in the last few months, they have also introduced a scheme under which the sepoy gets all his replacements of clothing in kind, instead of having to meet them out of an allowance, which may not, in certain circumstances, be adequate for the purpose. So that he is relieved of all risk of loss and all anxiety in this respect. Lastly, another direction in which very much has been done and is being done for the sepoy and the Indian officer is in connection with the scale of accommodation and standard of comfort. Their lines have been very much improved. If any one has the curiosity to examine our Military Works expenditure figures, I think he will realise what a great deal is being done in this direction. Large sums of money are given every year towards the improvement and rebuilding of Indian lines and the improvement of Indian hospitals and the introduction of the Station Hospital scheme.

[Sir G. B. H. Fell ; Sir Dinshaw Wacha.]

"I have endeavoured to show that the sepoy and the higher ranks have already benefited very largely during the war. Their conditions of service have been very much improved. But I should like to point out that it is not really necessary or desirable to attempt a comparison between the bonus which has recently been given to the British Army and what has been done for the Indian Army. As I have endeavoured to show, the bonus to the British service was intended principally as a compensation to men who had the misfortune not to obtain release from military service so early as they had hoped and consequently were handicapped in the race for well-paid appointments at home. In the case of the Indian Army, there is no such necessity. All the men can be absorbed at once and without difficulty into the agricultural and industrial life of the country.

"Under our voluntary recruiting system we have raised all the men we want and more. The response has been magnificent; and our difficulty now is to get rid of the surplus men. It is not as if they were anxious to leave the ranks; in many cases they are most unwilling to do so, because they are better off where they are. And so there is no obligation on Government to frame measures to induce them to stay on, as in the case of the British service.

"In the matter of demobilisation, too, the Indian soldier is being very well treated. He is given a month's leave on full pay after he is discharged and is paid up in advance; he is allowed to take away with him most of his clothing, his boots, his tunic and so on.

"A scheme is under consideration and will—I think I may say without impropriety—almost certainly be sanctioned in a very short time, for the grant to the ranks of the Indian Army of a war batta, at a cost which I estimate will not be less than 1½ million pounds.

"I hope, Sir, that I have succeeded in showing that this Council need not fear that the Government of India have been unmindful of the welfare of the Indian sepoy and other allied classes. I think it is clear that they are better off than ever before; and in proof of that I may mention that competent authorities say that in the villages from which the greatest number of recruits have been obtained, there is more money than has ever been seen there before. Money has poured in from the front, from the units, and from the depôts. The men have had plenty of money to send to their families; and they are not unnaturally reluctant to leave the ranks and to return to their ordinary avocations."

The Hon'ble Sir Dinshaw Wacha:—"Sir, the Budget is, no doubt, considered to be of a transitional character, and I admit it is transitional. The Hon'ble the Finance Minister himself has said so. At the same time I find in this Council that some have blessed it and some have cursed it. It must happen like that. Those, perhaps, who understand better the trend of the very lucid exposition of the Financial Statement by the Hon'ble the Finance Minister will certainly bless it. I am one of those who will bless it twice. It is more or less, I believe, Sir, the ignorant critic in this Council who has cursed it; but I do not blame the ignorant critic for entertaining the view he does. For the simple reason is that he is not well-informed; and in the Council what usually happens is that there is more of ill-informed and ignorant criticism than informed and enlightened criticism. Now, Sir, I hope no Hon'ble Member will tax me afterwards in the newspapers with saying that Sir Dinshaw Wacha said this, that or the other. What I say is meant for their good and for the good of every one else. For instance, my friend, the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma, last year, had to say something very bizarre about the currency problems. I am glad to notice to-day—and I give him full credit for it—that the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma has given his close attention to a variety of subjects in a very successful manner; but not being a business-man he is still not able to grasp the subject of currency quite thoroughly; though, as I have said, I give him full credit for the success he has already attained, and I hope that in ten years' time he will be fully qualified to be the Finance Minister in place of the Hon'ble Sir James Meston. We are going to have a national Government, and if we are unable to get a competent Finance Minister in the country, I do not know where we shall be? It will be considered ridiculous if the Nationalists cannot put up a successful financier of their own to take the portfolio of the Finance Minister.

3-18 P.M.

[Sir Dinshaw Wacha.] [7TH MARCH, 1919.]

“ Apart from all this, which is a mere preliminary, I, Sir, cordially associate myself with most of what has fallen from my esteemed and Hon'ble friend, Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjea. I think, Sir, that his exposition of the financial position and the criticisms he founded on it were very sound, sound in every way. I find in this place that Railways and Military expenditure have been most freely criticised—that is on the side of expenditure: there is something said also on the revenue side over a variety of items. Well, Sir, I have been a student of military expenditure, as most Members of the Government of India may be aware for the last 50 years. I have been a student of finance for the same period, I do not think there has been a sterner critic of the military expenditure of Government than myself, and evidence of that fact may be found in the numerous pamphlets that I have written on this subject and in the many speeches that I have made on the Congress platform and elsewhere during the past 50 years. So I hope no one will accuse me of saying that Sir Dinshaw Wacha this time is standing up for military expenditure. I do admit at once that military expenditure is at present very high this year, according to the estimate, it is 11 millions more than last year. But we have to take into consideration the extraordinary times through which we are passing. Some of my Hon'ble colleagues seem to think that because peace is nigh, or the Peace Conference is sitting and the war is practically over, therefore the Army expenditure must at once be reduced. Nothing of the kind will happen. Personally, I should congratulate the Hon'ble the Finance Minister if he is fortunate enough to be in a position to reduce his military expenditure by a few millions next year. Consider, Sir, the menace that is at the present moment threatening us on the North-West Frontier. Consider the position in the Near and Middle East. Consider what the Bolsheviki are doing in Central Asia, and how the Government of India are obliged to be in a state of complete readiness to repel any external aggression that may take place and to keep India quiet. I shall ask those gentlemen who are now discussing this military expenditure to consider what would happen, assuming that our enemies were at the gates of Peshawar or Kashmir or anywhere else, where should we be? Many more millions than the expenditure we are now discussing would have to be incurred. Where are they to come from? I think, Sir, in a matter of this kind we have essentially to look to this, that the first and paramount duty of Government in this country is to safeguard it from external aggression, and the second is, to maintain internal law and order. For both purposes, the Military as well as the Police are required, and so long as we are incurring reasonable expenditure on both these items, I, for one, would not discuss it or criticise it. Having said so much, let us see what the facts are about military expenditure budgetted for in the present Budget. The military expenditure was 29·892 millions last year. It has now risen—practically the whole of the military expenditure has been increased by 11·614 millions, which is equivalent to 41·70 per cent. over last year's estimate. But, Sir, what is this large increase in military expenditure due to? Let us analyse it. In the first place, apart from pay, allowances, and one thing and another, the strength of the army has been increased. It may go down next year or the year after; but still for the coming financial year there is a larger army than there was last year by something like 200,000 men. There is another fact to be considered. We have been importing for the last four years all those munitions of war, which, of course, we cannot manufacture in India.

[Sir Dinshaw Wacha.]

Those munitions have been of a very high quality and dear in price. Then, you have to take into account the freight on those munitions of war imported from abroad. This is very high. Every one knows how the freight has gone up—in some cases as much as 100-150 per cent. more than it was before. Surely all these munitions of war—ordnance, guns, etc.,—which we cannot manufacture in India and have to import from England, must cost more and go to increase the estimates.

“Then take the food of the soldiers themselves. Everybody is complaining here about the dearness of rice and dāl, of wheat, of other cereals daily demanded for those who protect the country within and even elsewhere. Surely the Government is paying high prices for the rations of soldiers. They have to pay and feed the soldiers in a generous way, and they must pay a higher price for their services and food and clothing. Were our Military Adviser to put before us a statement, with full particulars for each member, it will be seen at a glance when he analyses the larger items of military expenditure, where they have come from? In short, what may be their history? So, I do not think that on the whole our military expenditure has been so very extravagant as some people think having regard to all the matters I have referred to. I do not think it is.

“Then, Sir, to be very short, I will not say more on the question of military expenditure. I think that the Military Adviser of the Government, in answer to the Hon'ble Mr. Surendranath Banerjea, has given us a very complete and very illuminating statement. I think that statement ought to satisfy every Indian here. We ought to be gratified that the Government is doing all it can to improve the prospects of the Indian troops. It may be that later on, when the League of Nations is established, of which I have very grave doubts myself (because whatever people may say human nature is human nature after all) there will be a large and satisfactory reduction of armaments. But the League has yet to be established. It may take years. In the meantime, I hope, Sir, that when a firm peace is established very soon, we may be able to demobilise the army and get its strength reduced compatible with perfect safety. I am quite sure that the Finance Minister will be the first person and His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief too, to see that we economise to the utmost possible extent consistent with efficiency. I admit, and I have often admitted, that our present land-revenue and assessed taxes between them absorb in fact the whole of the military expenditure, possibly more.

“Now, coming to railways, I have heard a great deal being said about them. This again is another subject to which I have paid very great attention for the past thirty or forty years. After Lord Inchcape's Committee sat and made its report, I was the only person in all India who wrote a series of articles thereon. These articles were afterwards collected in pamphlet form, and I believe I sent several copies to the Government of India and also a copy to my friends Sir James Meston and Sir William Meyer. There, I said that at that time, in 1909, railways were being built at what you may call a breathless pace. I was one of those who said that irrigation works must have precedence over new railways and more attention bestowed upon them. I am glad to say that since those days irrigation works have been completed, I mean almost all the great works which our great engineers, Sir Scott Moncrieff and others of the Irrigation Commission had recommended, and which the Government of India afterwards adopted. Since then, of course, several other large projects also have been started, and I daresay we shall go on with them. Nobody can deny that irrigation is one of the principal problems of the State in India, because the more we have of irrigation the more we shall grow wheat and other agricultural products. We shall be better able to feed our growing population, and possibly be able to export the surplus which will bring additional wealth to this country. Therefore, irrigation is a source of wealth as much as railways are. But I am informed that one of the reasons why irrigation works at present cannot be carried on vigorously is this: that Government have not enough water-works engineers to cope with the work. So many people are being employed in England and elsewhere that there is a great dearth of engineers to carry on the works. There may be other reasons too which I do not know, and perhaps the

Finance Minister will possibly be able to tell us what they are, but I do say that irrigation works are now on the whole well nigh completed by Government, and it may be that there are a few more which remain. According to the Budget estimates about agriculture which Sir Claude Hill will introduce, I think we are going on the right lines and smoothly; and I have not the slightest doubt that when peace is restored, we shall do more in the cause of irrigation. Coming to railways I do say, Sir, that although I was one of the severest critics of Government who ten years ago said that railways were being built at breathless pace, at the present moment I am convinced by the experience of the last four years that the expenditure which is now going to be incurred both the £6½ million on the revenue side and the 17½ millions by loan are absolutely necessary. Consider the enormous depreciation of railway stock. Consider what a large number of waggons, locomotives and other railway materials have been transplanted to Mesopotamia and elsewhere. Could we have conquered Palestine, could we have gone on to Kut and Baghdad, could we have so ably defended the Suez Canal but for these? I do not think so. I think, Sir, that India has helped a vast deal in bringing that success in Asia Minor that we are witnessing to-day. We ought really to congratulate ourselves that India has been so very helpful. She has been helpful in many ways, but she has been particularly helpful in Mesopotamia. Consider the amount of rolling-stock, waggons, etc., which have gone there. It is a good fortune of ours that we have in our midst the Tata's Iron Works; otherwise we would have been obliged to get our steel rails from England; and you may consider what a larger expenditure that would have involved. Therefore, in a way, the great Tatas are really helping the Government and the people since they have been able to supply a great deal of war material, particularly steel rails. That being so, it is absolutely necessary now that we must replenish our rolling-stock and put all systems of our railways in a position to carry on the enormous traffic that is bound to ensue. Most of it is at the present time mere scrap of iron and may be sold for what it is worth as such. If you, therefore, look to the estimates and other things you will find that we shall have to incur immense expenditure, but of a reproductive character on this account. You cannot get railway materials, steel rails, etc., etc., from England at the prices which you paid four years ago. I do not think that for another three years India will be in a position to buy as cheaply as she did, say, in 1914. Well, if these matters are taken into consideration, and if the President of the Railway Board will put before us all the details of the estimates as to how he has arrived at those figures, I think every Member of this Council will be satisfied that the amount was worth incurring. A curious circumstance that I noticed in the speeches of many of my colleagues who inveighed against this railway expenditure, is their inconsistency; in one breath they bitterly complain of the heavy railway estimates and in another, they complain that 'corn is very dear; freights are very dear; we cannot get on. The merchants complain.' Why? Because the railways are all jammed or congested and they cannot bring the produce from the interior as soon and as best as they can possibly do. If that be the condition then I suppose everybody will reasonably admit that necessarily we have to replenish our railway materials, rolling-stock, etc., and put them in such a position of efficiency as to enable them to bring corn and other products from one end of the country to the other as speedily as possible and in a cheaper way. It is for the purpose of getting food and other products that the large expenditure now absolutely necessary on railway account must be incurred. Our exports of produce bring us wealth; and our exports being limited, why, our imports also have been limited. That is exactly the reason why we are obliged to extend our paper currency. Silver and gold could not be imported because there is an embargo and then there are the very limited imports. If anybody looks at the trade returns he will find that the balance of trade in favour of India has been about 300 crores during the last four years. Where is that money gone? It is very largely hoarded no doubt. Silver has been pouring in in stream after stream and rupees coined to back up the enlarged currency which was absolutely necessary, from time to time, swiftly disappear. Where have these crores of newly coined rupees gone? People hoarded gold and silver because they were afraid that they could not get these precious metals owing to limited imports and the embargo. There is a great scramble for silver and gold all over the world; and there will be greater scramble when peace is established. Every Government, even the smallest European Governments, will require them, and we shall perhaps be famished for gold. The people are wise; they think that if they can get gold and silver and hoard it before the famine in these precious metals overtake the world they could melt it any day. That is one of the reasons of the abnormal hoarding. It is only when exports and imports increase that things will become normal and hoarding will cease and the rupees come into active circulation. It is for this purpose that our railways should be so fully recuperated as to be able to carry more and more goods to the ports for exports and internal trade. The larger the exports the greater the imports of goods which will certainly diminish hoarding and release the silver now disappearing so fast as it is coined. Mr. Sarma is very anxious to see that the currency which is partially inflated should be brought to a normality. The Finance Minister has very largely dealt with this subject in his speech, and I think that as soon as the normal condition of things is established, as far as railways are concerned, we shall be all the better economically and forge ahead.

“I will only add a few more remarks. I do not want to take up the time of the Council. I do not want to be told by the President in Council that I have exceeded my twenty minutes. A good deal has been talked about education and about sanitation; it has been said that we should spend more and more on them. But have they looked and compared these items with those of last year? Look at the increase on education and compare the actual accounts of 1917-18 with the Budget estimates for 1919-20. There is an increase of 44 per cent.; that too, at a time, of stress and in spite of the Hon'ble the Education Member being only too keen to give us double or treble the sum budgetted for. Coming next to the item of sanitation, there is an increase of 348 over the accounts of 1917-18. It is equivalent to an increase of 57 per cent. Can this be called starving sanitation? Our people do not seem to understand that Government has no pagoda tree which has simply to be shaken to get unlimited amount of rupees from which to spend 200 or 300 crores on sanitation and education! Practically while military expenditure, heavy as it has been complained, is only 41 per cent., whereas in reference to the items of education and sanitation the increases actually come to 44 and 57 per cent. Government is a limited concern and its resources are limited, India's financial resources are extremely limited in comparison with those of the flourishing countries in Europe. Then there is the question of housing; this is a difficult problem; there are 75 to 80 per cent. of the population living in one-room tenements; that being so can you expect any better results of mortality than those annually recorded? It is the duty of the public, and it is the duty of all large employers of labour to cordially co-operate with the Government and see that the housing problem is satisfactorily settled. If this is done, I am sure the mortality statistics will be greatly reduced. An increase meanwhile of 33 per cent. in sanitation is not bad; on the contrary, I say it is very good. We have been talking about Police, but there is an increase of only 12 per cent. We have been talking about Medical expenditure. I see we have an increase of 38 per cent. over the accounts of 1917-18. Lastly, we come to agriculture. Look at the United States which has been spending crores on this. But the Agricultural Department is only of recent creation. Still I must say we are annually doing better and better. To have an increase of 26 per cent. is certainly satisfactory. We have to remember that this is a transitional period; so that taking everything of an exceptional nature into consideration, I regard the Financial Statement as a very good one, and I congratulate the Hon'ble Sir James Meston on the admirable and luminous manner in which he has presented it, especially that essay on the 'outlook' which should be read, marked and inwardly digested by those earnestly interested in our finances. The future, I fear, will not be very bright for some time to come; the burden of taxation will be heavier; our interest obligations will be a great deal larger. We shall have perforce to meet vast sums as interest charge on the growing national debt, so that our resources for meeting expenditure on sanitation, education and other desirable objects, will be limited in proportion to our resources. I conclude by once more congratulating the Hon'ble Sir James Meston on his luminous Budget speech and its weighty reflections."

9-41 P.M.

The Hon'ble Mr. H. F. Howard:—"Sir, the Hon'ble Sir James Meston has asked me to speak on one or two points. I have a grievance against the Hon'ble Sir Dinshaw Wacha for having taken out of my mouth a good deal that I was going to say. Now, the first point on which I shall touch is that of railway expenditure. I have no doubt this will be discussed when Mr. Sarma brings up his threatened Resolution in the second part of the proceedings, but there is one essentially financial aspect of this question, that is the remunerative character of our railways. I think the Hon'ble Mr. Ironside touched briefly on this in his speech, but it is apt to be overlooked. Railways have been for many years almost the backbone of our revenue system ; they have been bringing in very large sums indeed, and the nett profits after paying all expenses, such as working expenses, the interest on sums borrowed for building them, and so on, have amounted to very large sums. In 1917-18, the figure after paying all these expenses amounted to £9·9 millions. This year we expect it will be £11 millions. That sum is larger than we can ordinarily expect, because railways have been starved on the revenue side. But after paying all expenses we expect that next year the sum will still be £6 to £7 millions. I think, therefore, that those who ask us to reduce the railway grants and speak as the Hon'ble Mr. Patel did of 'railway magnates battenning on sums beyond their wildest dreams,' are, to put it plainly, ignorant of the real position. What they are asking us to do is to 'kill the goose that lays the golden eggs,' and if I have anything to say in any advice I give to the Hon'ble Sir James Meston it will be to keep that goose alive. There are just one or two other points that I wish to mention in connection with the railway grants. Those Hon'ble Members in this Council who ask us to starve this poor goose are apt to blame it for not doing what it should do. We had a lecture last year from the Hon'ble Pandit, who is not in his place now, about the hardships of 3rd class passengers. We recognise that this is not as it should be, but obviously shortcomings in this respect cannot be rectified unless our railways are placed in a position to carry the traffic required. The Hon'ble Mr. Shukul has asked what we are doing to stop famines. I am afraid that we cannot control the monsoon, but Mr. Sarma's remedy of relieving the congestion on the railways by obtaining additional shipping would not help in the carriage of grain to the districts where it is required. Mr. Shukul said that we are doing nothing for the agriculturist suffering from scarcity. I should like to mention that in the current year we are estimating for remissions 49 lakhs, suspensions of revenue 256 lakhs, and direct famine expenditure 81 lakhs. Next year we have provided for remissions and suspensions of revenue 65 lakhs and 166 lakhs, and for direct famine expenditure of 172 lakhs. I think that Mr. Shukul also overlooked the enormous sums that we have expended in past years on protective works. These and our productive works undoubtedly at a time like this have been of great protection to us, and I do not think they can reasonably be ignored.

"There is just one other point, Sir, that Mr. Sarma touched on. He asked us why we had incurred all this unnecessary expenditure under the head 'Miscellaneous' in the current year. I would just like to refer to some of the items. In Bengal and Central Provinces and the United Provinces the chief increases were due

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—"I referred to Miscellaneous, Army. I did not refer to the head 'Miscellaneous,'"

[7TH MARCH, 1919.]

[Mr. H. F. Howard ; Sardar Sundar Singh Majithia.]

The Hon'ble Mr. H. F. Howard:—" I beg the Hon'ble Member's pardon. I understood that he was referring to the figures under the ordinary miscellaneous head which include charges such as grain shops and relief of scarcity, and so forth.

" I think, Sir, these are the only points that I desire to refer to. "

The Hon'ble Sardar Sundar Singh Majithia:—" Sir, in going through the Financial Statement and the Narrative of the Hon'ble Sir James Meston one finds that he has most economically and with great ingenuity tried to handle the resources of the country to make two ends meet and to get through the difficulties of the situation which was presented to him. He would have met the normal requirements at the present juncture, but the legacy of heavy liabilities on account of the war, coupled with the agricultural situation, has made his task very difficult. It is, therefore, most gratifying to find that he has not only avoided heavy taxation, but has seen his way to grant relief to people with small means who have been hard hit by raising the limit of taxable income from 1,000 to 2,000 rupees. This concession will be gratefully received by the people of small means, and will be greatly appreciated by them, but it cannot materially benefit the middle class agriculturists who along with the other members of the community have to meet comparatively heavier expenditure to carry on their agricultural pursuits. The epidemic of influenza and its effect upon agricultural labour has hit the ordinary agriculturist very hard, and but for better prices his position would have been extremely delicate.

" The war has, thank God, come to a victorious end, and the armies of His Majesty the King-Emperor have gained a well-deserved victory, and the cause which was upheld by His Majesty and His Allies has triumphed over the militarism of the Central Powers and the enemy has been sufficiently crippled not to be able to take up arms in future and to ruthlessly disturb the peace, and this might enable us to provide less for the army in future ; but the after-effects of war will necessitate our not being sparing in the needs of the army and the country must be prepared to meet the needs of an efficient army for the defence of the Empire. This will naturally require larger allotments than has been the case hitherto, as the present war has taught that aeroplanes, armoured cars, tanks, and other scientific methods of warfare and the improved transport must cost comparatively more than what used to be spent hitherto. Keeping all this in view I have to join the Hon'ble the Finance Member in thanking His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief for his rigid economy in putting forward his demands, and though our expenditure would be practically half of the total outlay of the country, I think it could not be grudged and we must not hurry in cutting down military expenditure as the improvements in other directions depends upon the peace and prosperity in the country, and the army, no doubt, plays its necessary part in securing this to the country. While on this point I would strongly urge the throwing open of higher posts to Indians in greater numbers than has hitherto been done. In the giving of these posts I regret to observe that my community, which has been foremost and unstinting in this branch of the service of the Empire, has not received its adequate share of these posts, and this has caused disappointment in Sikh circles. I would, therefore, press the claims of my community as also of others with military traditions upon the attention of His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, and have no doubt that the matter would receive his kind consideration.

" The next item of heavy outlay has no doubt been claimed by the Railway. It has to be conceded that we have to make up for past curtailments due to war. The Hon'ble Members of this Council are no doubt aware of the inconveniences which the travelling public and the commercial community have had to put up with owing to the curtailment of train services, both passenger and goods. I have seen, Sir, large consignments of goods lying on railway stations, in goods yards and even on platforms, and in many cases being damaged or deteriorated by climatic effects due chiefly to want of necessary waggons and the provision of larger train services. I know that many a trader would be willing to join together and pay for the running of special goods trains to rail their wares to centres where they could be profitably disposed of, but the want of rolling-stock and locomotives is, I believe, in the way, and I therefore think that the Hon'ble the Finance Member was right in giving the second place in his Budget to the needs of the Railway, and I think it should not be grudged. I quite admit that the needs of education and sanitation are also paramount, but their requirements have not been forgotten by the Finance Member, and with the hard times before him he has given comparatively larger allotments in his Budget. We find that compared with the figures of last year he is giving 1 crore and a little over 37 lakhs to education, 40½ lakhs to sanitation, and nearly 29 lakhs more to agriculture. The Council will thus see, Sir, that the Hon'ble Sir James Meston has not been unmindful of the needs under these heads. I must say that these departments require more, and I am sure the Education Department would find no difficulty in spending more if the funds were available, as thus alone could the illiteracy of the people be banished from the country. If people are to be fitted to take an intelligent part in the coming reforms, greater amounts will have to be spent on education. I have to thank the Government for the beneficent grant of three lakhs to the Khalsa College, and this no doubt will be gratefully appreciated and will come in very handy to the institution to complete the main building and to provide additional hostel accommodation for the increasing number of students who have to come there to fit themselves for life as useful citizens of the Empire.

"As to the tendencies of the people to hoard money in war times, I am one with the Finance Member in regretting this, but it must be admitted that this is a great deal due to the low standard of education amongst the people, and Sir James Meston could not expect a great majority of illiterate people to rise equal to the tests of high financial efficiency. It is the village people who have eventually to deal with the paper currency, and the average villager with his want of education cannot be brought up to the new way of thinking. Even the leather notes of the great Qaran had a golden nail embedded in it. Though, therefore, the habit of hoarding is to be very much regretted and deprecated but under the circumstances it is excusable to some extent. I think the restrictions on the importation of gold and silver due chiefly to tonnage difficulties accounts to some extent for the extra demand on the metallic currency. I fully realize the strenuous labours of our late Finance Member Sir William Meyer and the Department over which he ruled to meet the situation, and Sir James Meston's praise is fully merited.

"On the whole, I have to offer the Hon'ble Sir James Meston my hearty congratulations for the skilful and able handling of the situation and resources at his command. He has not been unmindful of strict economy, and I have no doubt that with better times his hold of the strings of the Government Exchequer would not have been so tight. He has to grapple with the peculiar situation, and our sympathies are with him in his arduous task. With better times I have no doubt the legitimate demands of education, sanitation and agriculture will receive more liberal treatment at his hands."

8-55 P.M.

The Hon'ble Sir James Meston: "Sir, the interesting discussion to which we have just listened has covered such a vast range of topics that it would be quite impossible to attempt to deal with it adequately during the short time that is left to Council to-day. I propose, therefore, to allude only very briefly in the first place to certain general propositions which have been emphasised in the course of the discussion, and, in the second place, to touch briefly upon certain arguments, either because they were imperfectly stated or were misleading in form, and it is undesirable to allow them to be passed over in entire silence. Before going on to that, Sir, I wish to express my thanks to the various Hon'ble Members who have been good enough to say pleasant things about the Budget and about myself personally. It is indeed a great pleasure to be back in this Council. I was one of the Members of the first Council that sat under the then new Minto-Morley Reform Scheme at Calcutta. There are still a few Members of those days present here. It was a very interesting gathering full of emotion and excitement. The leadership of the opposition was in the capable hands of Mr. Gokhale, whose inspiring influence and control over the non-official side of the Council was undoubtedly the dominant characteristic of that gathering. Therefore I say, Sir, it is a pleasure to be back here again at a time when further great reforms are in prospect, and when this Council is looking forward to step into a larger and more responsible share in the government of the country. The dominant feature of the Budget to-day has been the old story that Government gives too much attention to, and bestows too large a share of its funds on, the material progress of India, and too little on its moral, social, industrial, educational development. The story is one, Sir, on which, I think, we must await the verdict of history and of the verdict of history I am sure that none of us are afraid. We have made mistakes; we have made a grave mistake, I believe, in thinking, as we did, that we could leave the people of India to themselves to work out their own moral and social development. They clearly wanted much greater aid, much greater, more definite, more courageous assistance from the Government than they have received. But we did honestly believe, and we acted on the belief, that the first and greatest thing that lay to our hand was to make the people of India more contented and more prosperous, and in that way to make them readier to welcome the inevitable advent of economical and social progress. In that, Sir, I do not confess that we have failed. The Hon'ble the Maharaja of Cossimbazar did me the honour a few minutes ago of saying that I knew very little about the conditions of the people. I have no desire to enter into competition with the knowledge of the Maharaja, but I have not lived and worked in India for 33 years with my eyes shut, and I do say that in my time in India I have seen a very marked and very striking advance in the standard of comfort of the people of this country, an advance which has taken place among all classes of Indians in that period; and so I repeat that on that side of our task I am not afraid of the verdict of the future. However, be that as it may, the fact is that another chapter of this story is now coming to a conclusion and we are turning over a new leaf and starting a new chapter. New powers and new responsibilities are going to be given; we sincerely hope are going to be given to the representatives of the people under a scheme which we trust will very shortly materialise. These powers and these responsibilities will enable the chosen of the people to help us and stimulate us, to enter into partnership with us and take a much larger part in the development of these educational, sanitary, industrial interests about which we have heard so much to-day. With that I think I might very well leave the subject, except that it would be a grave discourtesy to pass over without a word of appreciation and a word of thanks some of the speeches, more particularly those of the two veterans in this Council, my Hon'ble friends Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjea and Sir Dinshaw Wacha. In the earnest and eloquent plea in which Mr. Banerjea has put forward for education and sanitation, I can assure him that he is preaching to an audience on this side of the Council who do not need to be converted. There is not one of us here that does not recognise the paramount importance of the cause which Mr. Banerjea has so forcibly advocated; there is not one of us who does not believe in his heart that without a generous and forceful programme in the matter of education and in the safeguarding of public health, our political progress will be little more than a mockery and a delusion. I personally, Sir, should like to see a great national movement, supported by a great national fund for true education, the education of the voter of the future to appreciate his civic duties, to recognise the power that is passing into his hands, and to learn wisely to use and exercise that power. I am not without hope that some great national movement, some great national fund of that sort will shortly materialise; and then I should like to see something parallel on the side of public health. If these things are to come, they will be, we hope, the first fruits and the proud fruits of the new regime. However, Sir, to-day we are discussing the Budget, we are not discussing the political future of India; and when we come to translate into practice and into figures (for that is the duty of all of us in the course of the Budget debate) the aspirations which have been given voice to in the course of to-day's discussion, I am not sure that some of our critics always treat us quite fairly.

[Sir James Meston.]

An attack, for instance, has been delivered to-day upon the large sum which we have given for the extension of railway facilities. My merry friend, Mr. Khaparde, described railways as a pure luxury, and others seem to regard them as a great nuisance, but the Hon'ble Mr. Ironside and the Hon'ble Mr. Howard have delivered a defence and the Hon'ble Sir Dinsshaw Wacha on his side has taken up the cudgels on behalf of the railways in a manner which leaves me under the necessity of saying very little more on their side. I would like those who believe that £17 $\frac{3}{4}$ millions is an excessive sum to devote next year to railway development to understand exactly what it implies. It simply implies this. For the last four years we have been devoting practically nothing to railway extension, and we have to distribute a very large share of that £17 $\frac{3}{4}$ millions over four years of past neglect. If we go through that very simple arithmetical process, I am inclined to think that the real rise in railway capital expenditure next year would be something negligible. Now, if we drop pure rhetoric on the subject, if we refrain from flights of fancy on the figures, if we try to persuade ourselves that it is worth looking twice at the proposition that education is starved, sanitation is starved, industries are starved, we should probably open the Financial Statement, and more particularly that valuable memorandum signed by Mr. Howard, which follows it, and dig for ourselves a little more into the figures. Mr. Banerjea and Sir Dinsshaw Wacha have done a little digging, but some of their colleagues, I am afraid, have not. If they will look at page 46 of Mr. Howard's memorandum they will find that next year the provision for education over the whole of India is 7 crores and 30 lakhs. I am taking Imperial and Provincial together: it is obviously essential they should be considered in combination. This figure as against 5.93 crores for the current year represents a rise of 23 per cent. in one single year. If they turn over a few pages more and come to sanitation, they will find that the proposed expenditure for next year is 1 crore 43 lakhs, against 1 crore 3 lakhs this year—a rise of 40 per cent. These percentages do not seem to me to be particularly bad for one single year and that a year in which, as most of our critics have recognised, our general financial difficulties are very considerable.

"Similarly, I do not think they have done sufficient justice to the Report of the Industries Commission and the imposing programme which my Hon'ble Colleague, Sir Thomas Holland, will very shortly place before the country. At the present moment it is being investigated with the greatest possible rapidity—with a rapidity accorded, I venture to think, to no similar programme in the records of the Government of India; and I have little doubt that you will find in the next Budget, whatever provision the Hon'ble Sir Thomas Holland considers possible to employ during the next year. I may go further and say that if before next year's Budget he finds it necessary to utilise money for the beneficial development of industries, he will have no difficulty in getting it out of me.

"From these general propositions, Sir, I turn to a few of the more miscellaneous—I trust I may call them that without offence—miscellaneous fallacies voiced by Hon'ble Members in the course of to-day's discussion. My Hon'ble friend, the Maharaja of Cossimbazaar, in the course of his address, employed a sentence which I tried to take down at the time, and which, I think, was to this effect. He said 'Here is a poor country like India being saddled with England's military expenditure in Mesopotamia and East Africa'. I hope I did not misunderstand my Hon'ble friend; but if I did not, then I think that he will discover, if he will examine the statistics in the Narrative of our military expenditure, that he has been ill-advised on this particular topic. Practically the whole cost of the military operations in Mesopotamia and East Africa was borne by the British Treasury, and the only part that we have taken in it, by way of financial assistance, has been in the form of the two donations which were offered to the British Treasury last year and again in September. I am sure that the Hon'ble Member would not like to see either of those donations withdrawn, and I am sure he is not ashamed of them. I know him too well to think that his patriotism is shallow enough for that. As regards military expenditure generally, all that could be said on the subject has been well and fully said by the Hon'ble Sir Godfrey Fell.

" Again, my Hon'ble friend the Maharaja, in the course of his address, expressed a wish to see railways nationalised, and the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma expressed the same aspiration with regard to shipping. I turn to the speech which has been placed on the table and treated as read by our Hon'ble colleague from Madras, in which, like a second Cassandra, he tells us that everybody and everything is wrong; and there I discover that he talks in most melancholy tones about the rapid advance which this Government is taking in the direction of State socialism. To which leader are we going to turn ?

" Another little point which I noted at the time was the Hon'ble Mr. Chanda's statement that Local Governments have not been allowed to draw on their balances for sanitation. It is true that sanitation was not mentioned among the particular subjects which Local Governments might use as reasons for withdrawing their balances; but here again a little study of the figures will show him that they have not failed to exercise a very wise discretion in utilising their past savings for this very desirable purpose. On page 53 again of Mr. Howard's memorandum he will find that Local Governments have increased their sanitary allotments for next year by over 30 lakhs.

" The same Hon'ble gentleman made, as I understand, a grievance of it that we had not helped by a special grant a college which lies very close to his heart in Assam. I find that the Province of Assam has a closing balance next year of 38 lakhs. I hope he has done all that he can to get a grant out of that before he comes to us; and if he has not, I hope that he will do so now.

" The Hon'ble Mr. Patel asked me two specific questions. The first was whether Parliament had sanctioned the appropriation of the revenues of India to the extent that was proposed during next year for the assistance of military operations outside India. My reply is that Parliament has not yet, as far as I know, sanctioned this. Parliament has not been continuously in Session and has been occupied with many grave matters of State since the end of the war. It is quite possible that there has been no opportunity for the Secretary of State to put the matter formally before Parliament. I have no doubt, however, that when he does so, Parliament will accept the gift in the same spirit in which that gift was offered by India.

" The second question the Hon'ble Mr. Patel put was whether the increased pay for the Indian Medical Service and the Indian Police Service which has been sanctioned by the Secretary of State comes within the present Budget. I am not able to give him a categorical answer, because I have not the detailed provincial figures before me, but I have little doubt they are there. If they are not there, they will be put there in due course.

" One or two Hon'ble Members have spoken on the subject of irrigation, pointing to the unsatisfactory nature of the grants allotted to irrigation as compared with the more generous grants made to Railways. I have no doubt their apprehensions will be relieved when my Hon'ble colleague Sir Claude Hill opens the next stage of this discussion. But I think, I ought to assure the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma that there is really no reason to fear, as he seems to suggest, that in entering upon any large railway programme, we lay ourselves open to the criticism that we do so in order to give employment to British workmen in England, and that the absence of any such consideration has influenced us in keeping down our irrigation programme. On the contrary, I most cordially agree with the Hon'ble Sir Fazulbhoj Currimbhoj in the enormous importance he attaches to irrigation. We have given every rupee that was asked for, and I trust we will continue to do so. There are, as Hon'ble Members will recognise, vast differences between the capacity for progress in irrigation schemes, and the capacity for progress in railway schemes. It is very easy when you have got a railway running into a certain town, when funds are available, to extend the railway to another town further away. It is a very different proposition to construct a new canal. The space left on the map of India for the making of new canals is very limited, and projects which are now in prospect are immense projects which will require the most careful and anxious professional scrutiny before they are finally sanctioned. As soon as they are sanctioned, I think I can promise, in so far as income lies, that the money shall be found.

" Then the Hon'ble Rai Bahadur Sita Nath Rai rebuked me for what he called my 'incubus of the mythical millions buried underground', and told us that there is no hoarding in India, that the habit of hoarding has been forgotten, that money is coming freely into investments. I find my Hon'ble friend Sir Dinshaw Wacha took a somewhat different line on the same subject. But the proposition to my mind is simply this: 'during the last four years we have turned out of our mints twelve hundred million silver rupees, and wherever I go to-day I never succeed in finding one. If I present a five-rupee note at a shop here in Delhi, I get four discoloured rupee-notes and some small change. If I ask for rupees, I am treated as if I were an enemy of the gentleman who owns the shop. Well, what has happened to all these rupees?

The Hon'ble Rai Sitanath Ray Bahadur :—" They have been converted into ornaments. "

The Hon'ble Sir James Meston :—" I suppose that is another proof of the growing poverty of India. I shall not detain the Council longer. There is a great deal on which I should like to speak, more particularly on the vast field which has been opened up in the discourse of my friend, Mr. Sarma. But I resist the temptation. The Council has recognised, and recognised generously, that in a time of high prices, unsettled trade and many future uncertainties, it is very difficult to get reliable estimates at all; and it is of the first importance to get estimates which are cautious, humdrum if you like, orthodox. Those are the sort of estimates which we have to put before you this year. It is a period of transition; nothing sensational, nothing generous was possible. The Council have also expressed in unmistakable terms their adhesion to our faith in the financial future of the country, the progressive prosperity of India and the growing employment of its resources in a wise campaign which must necessarily take a two-fold character. Each side of that campaign supplements the other; neither would be possible without the other. One is a campaign of social, moral, educational, industrial advance; and another is the continuance of our present reasoned development of the material resources of the country. To these hopes and aspirations the Government of India unhesitatingly subscribe."

The Council adjourned to Saturday, the 8th instant, at 11 A. M.

MEMORANDUM EXPLAINING THE DETAILS OF THE ESTIMATES.

In this memorandum the variations between the Budget and the Revised estimates of the current year, and between the latter and the Budget estimates of next year, are explained in detail for the major heads of account. Under most of the heads details by provinces have been given, and it may be explained that the figures shown against "India General" represent the transactions of the Central Government, including all expenditure directly controlled by it, of the minor administrations of Ajmer-Merwara and Coorg, and of the convict settlement in the Andamans. The Budget estimates of Provincial and "Divided" expenditure in 1919-20 generally represent the allotments proposed by the several Governments and Administrations with whom regular provincial settlements have been concluded. More detailed information regarding the figures will be found in the Financial Statements presented by the local Governments to their respective Councils.

Introductory.

2. The figures for the province of Delhi have been entered separately and explained under each major head of account. A pro formâ account of expenditure on Delhi and the Delhi province is also appended to this memorandum (Appendix I), together with a prefatory note explaining the scope of the pro formâ account and the relation between it and the regular accounts.

3. A statement is added to the memorandum (Appendix II) bringing together for each province and for the Home treasury of the Government of India the actual revenue and expenditure under each major head during the last year, the Revised estimates of the current year and the Budget estimates of the next year. The statement takes the place of a return which was formerly presented separately to Parliament and will serve as an expansion of the totals of revenue and expenditure exhibited in the Budget Statements proper (Statements A to E) and as a summary of the figures shown for each province under the several heads in this memorandum.

4. The broad totals of revenue and expenditure for the last year, the current year and the ensuing year, are as follows :—

		Budget, 1919-20.
		£
Revenue		123,404,200
Expenditure charged to Revenue		122,735,600

These figures exclude all capital, debt and remittance transactions.

Accounts, 1917-18.

5. The Accounts of 1917-18 are not discussed in this memorandum, but according to our usual practice in the past a brief explanation is given below of the principal divergences between the Revised estimates of revenue and expenditure as submitted to the Council twelve months ago, and the actual accounts of the year as closed, audited and compiled by the Comptroller and Auditor-General.

6. The broad results are brought out in the following table :—

	Imperial.	Provincial.	TOTAL.	Imperial.	Provincial.	TOTAL.
Revenue . . .	76,563,200	33,361,100	109,924,300	79,137,200	83,525,100	112,662,300
Expenditure . . .	70,851,600	31,523,400	102,375,000	71,050,100	31,466,100	102,516,200
Surplus . . .	5,711,600	1,837,700	7,549,300	8,087,100	2,059,000	10,146,100

7. The Imperial revenue exceeded the Revised estimate by £2,574,000 and the Imperial expenditure by £198,500, with the result that the surplus was £2,375,500 more than was anticipated. The bulk of the increase in revenue occurred under exchange (£2,145,200) due to the application of the higher exchange rate of 1s. 5d. the rupee to recoveries of a portion of the war disbursements in India on behalf of His Majesty's Government. An agreement was reached with His Majesty's Government, after the Revised estimates for 1917-18 were closed, that the rate of 1s. 5d. should be applied, with effect from the 1st October 1917, to rupee payments of a quasi-commercial character, e.g., for the supply of military stores, the purchase of commodities and the remittance of funds, as distinguished from payments to personnel. There was an increase of £341,100 in the gross traffic receipts from railways, mainly on the North-Western, Bombay, Baroda and Central India and Madras and Southern Mahratta lines owing to large movements of troops and military stores towards the close of the year. The working expenses were also higher by £238,600, mainly on the North-Western and Great Indian Peninsula lines, so that the betterness in the net receipts of railways amounted to £102,500. Super-tax and postal and telegraph revenue showed improvements of £218,300 and £124,600 respectively, and a saving of £163,300 occurred in political expenditure. On the other hand, customs revenue declined by £167,600, mainly under the import duty on cotton manufactures, while the net military expenditure was higher by £260,700 owing to an increase in the charges for operations on the Frontier and the movement of troops and stores.

The improvement of £221,300 in the Provincial section was the result of better collections of excise and forest revenue and of savings in the grants for expenditure on civil works and land revenue establishments, partly set off by an excess under police expenditure.

9. The Imperial expenditure shown against "Other Provinces" in the table on the preceding page represents the cost of survey and record-of-right operations on a large scale in Bengal and in Bihar and Orissa, undertaken more for administrative than for fiscal purposes. The expenditure is of a temporary and varying character and was accordingly not considered suitable for inclusion in the financial settlements with the two provinces. Three-fourths of the charges are eventually recovered from landlords and tenants for the protection of whose rights the operations are primarily undertaken; and the recoveries are shown in the table as Imperial revenue against "Other Provinces".

REVENUE.

Revised, 1918-19.

10. The Revised estimate for 1918-19 is less than the Budget by R4.49 lakhs. A reduction of R1.40 lakhs is due to the postponement of recoveries of survey and settlement charges necessitated by the prevalence of scarcity in the Palamau district in Bihar and Orissa and damage caused by floods in the Rajshahi district in Bengal. The balance of the decrease occurs in the land revenue collections, mainly in Baluchistan (R1.85 lakhs) and Delhi (R94,000), as the result of unfavourable agricultural prospects.

Budget, 1919-20.

11. The Budget estimate for 1919-20 is less than the Revised for 1918-19 by R80,000. An increase in the receipts on account of survey and settlement charges owing to the recovery of the current year's suspensions in Bihar and Orissa and Bengal will be set off by a fall in the latter province as the result of a reduction in the programme of operations. Under land revenue collections, there will be decreases in the North-West Frontier Province (R1.27 lakhs) and Ajmer (R63,000) owing to the poor prospects of the ensuing harvest, but part of the revenue suspended in the current year in Baluchistan and Delhi will be realised in 1919-20.

(b) Divided and wholly Provincial.

Revised, 1918-19.

12. The total collections in 1918-19 will fall short of the Budget estimate by R2,92.03 lakhs. The agricultural prospects of the current year have been adversely affected by the failure of the rains over wide parts of Bombay and the United Provinces, and to a smaller extent in the Central Provinces, Madras, Bihar and Orissa, and the Punjab. Remissions and suspensions of revenue aggregating R49 and R2.59 lakhs respectively have been granted in these provinces, and the receipts will fall short of the Budget by R1,29.34 lakhs in Bombay, R83.55 lakhs in the United Provinces, R29.50 lakhs in Madras, and R28.10 lakhs in the Central Provinces. The decline in revenue would have been greater but for collections of arrears in the early months of the current year in almost all the provinces but chiefly in Bombay, and for improved receipts from the sale of waste lands and Government estates in the Punjab. There will also be a large decrease in Burma (R23.40 lakhs), owing to distress caused in some districts by the unfavourable condition of the paddy market during the greater part of the year and an anticipated reduction in the area under cultivation with rice in the current season. Bengal and Bihar and Orissa are the only provinces where an excess over the Budget estimate (R2.77 lakhs) is anticipated; there was a throw-forward of collections to the current year in these provinces owing to the kist days at the end of March 1918 falling within the Easter holidays.

Budget, 1919-20.

13. The total Budget estimate for 1919-20 is more than the Revised estimate for 1918-19 by R2,86.14 lakhs. The estimates have been framed on the basis of normal monsoon conditions in the ensuing year. It is expected that part of the revenue suspended in the current year in the provinces named above will be collected in 1919-20, but provision has been made for further remissions and suspensions in the latter year aggregating R65 and R1.66 lakhs respectively. The decrease in Burma (R23.60 lakhs) is explained by the fact that the Revised estimate for the current year includes a large amount of revenue postponed from 1917-18 owing to the unsettled condition of the paddy market in the latter part of that year.

EXPENDITURE.

(a) Wholly Imperial (India and England).

14. The saving of R4.60 lakhs on the Budget estimate for 1918-19 is Revised, 1918-19. chiefly due to lapses in the grants for survey and settlement expenditure in Bengal and Bihar and Orissa. The Budget estimate for 1919-20 does not Budget, 1919-20. differ materially from the Revised for the current year.

(b) Provincial.

15. The total expenditure in the current year will exceed the Budget Revised, 1918-19. estimate by R17.35 lakhs. An important cause of the excess is the grant of compensation to subordinate establishments for high prices; the expenditure on this account is estimated at R29.84 lakhs for all provinces, the largest provision being required in Bombay (R16.80 lakhs) and Madras (R5.22 lakhs). Among other causes contributing to an increase over the Budget are the purchase of land in the United Provinces for rewarding Indian soldiers who have distinguished themselves in the war (R5.22 lakhs) and larger outlay on commission on revenue collections in Burma postponed from 1917-18 (R4.56 lakhs). There will, on the other hand, be considerable savings owing to lapses in the provision for a new district and revision of district establishments in the Punjab (R2.33 lakhs), the transfer to the head Minor Works and Navigation in the same province of the charges for the Thal survey for which provision was included under this head in the Budget (R2.54 lakhs), smaller outlay on improvements in Government estates in Bengal (R1.11 lakhs), and minor lapses in the grants for village and other establishments mainly in Bombay and Madras.

16. The total Budget for 1919-20 exceeds the Revised for the current year Budget, 1919-20. by R6.49 lakhs. Provision has generally been based on existing sanctions and commitments. An expenditure of R24.30 lakhs is anticipated on compensation for high prices, mainly in Bombay (R14.42 lakhs) and Madras (R6.19 lakhs), but in some provinces provision for this expenditure is shown under the head Miscellaneous. The grants made in the current year's Budget for the formation of a new district (R1.33 lakhs) and the re-organisation of district establishments (R1.27 lakhs) in the Punjab have been repeated for the next year. Special allotments have also been made for measures to arrest the denudation of the Siwaliks in the same province (R1.50 lakhs), for the revision of village establishments in Sind (R1.66 lakhs) and Madras (R66,000) and for increased outlay on the improvement of Government estates (R1.16 lakhs), the introduction of the circle system (R85,000) and a larger programme of settlement operations (R96,000) in Bengal.

REVENUE.

(i) Provision and Medical opium.

Revised, 1918-19. 17. The Budget estimate for 1918-19 provided for a revenue of R4,10·27 lakhs from the sale of about 15,700 chests of opium for consumption outside India. Of this quantity 5,600 chests were to be disposed of at the monthly auctions held at Calcutta, and the balance was to be supplied to the Foreign Governments with which agreements have been entered into for the direct supply of opium at fixed prices (viz., the Straits Settlements, Hong-Kong, the Netherlands Indies, Siam and British North Borneo) or sold in England for medicinal purposes. The number of chests to be sold by auction was reduced during the year by 498 chests. On the other hand, the average price realised will, partly as the result of this reduction, amount to R3,413 a chest or R213 more than the upset price of R3,200, and the proceeds from auction sales are estimated at R1,74·15 lakhs. Taking into account opium supplied direct to other countries and sold in England for medicinal purposes, it is expected that about 15,100 chests will be disposed of in the current year, and that they will fetch a revenue of R4,16·24 lakhs.

Budget, 1919-20. 18. The Budget estimate for 1919-20 anticipates a revenue of R3,89·50 lakhs from the sale of provision and medical opium.

(ii) Excise opium and other revenue.

19. The variations are unimportant. Only the amount charged to local Governments on account of the cost of production of opium consumed in India is credited under this head, the difference between the actual price of issue and the cost of production forming an item of excise revenue.

EXPENDITURE.

Revised, 1918-19. 20. The Revised estimate for 1918-19 exceeds the Budget provision by R12·44 lakhs. The former includes some special expenditure in connection with purchases of mature Malwa opium effected in the current year. This extra expenditure will, however, be set off to a considerable extent by savings in the provision for payments to cultivators in the United Provinces and in the Central India States. The Budget estimate for 1919-20 provides for normal expenditure.

(a) Chiefly excise on local manufacture.

(b) Chiefly duty on imported salt.

REVENUE.

21. As anticipated in the Budget estimate, no fresh indents for salt were received from ordinary traders in Northern India in the current year and the receipts of duty relate therefore mainly to preferential issues to local bodies, co-operative credit societies, Indian States, etc. An offer to refund the duty paid by them in advance in previous years was made to the traders towards the close of 1917-18; in the current year's Budget allowance was made for the throw-forward to that year of part of the claims for refund,—the estimated revenue being shown net after deducting from the fresh duty receipts the payments anticipated on account of refunds. These payments have amounted to R63 lakhs, but provision for them is now included in the Revised estimate under the expenditure head Refunds and Drawbacks (vide paragraph 57). This change in the method of exhibition of refunds accounts for the greater part of the increase of R74·01 lakhs in the Revised estimate of revenue in Northern India as compared with the Budget, the balance being due to larger receipts of duty on preferential issues.

Increases are also anticipated in Madras (R16·61 lakhs) owing mainly to the continuance of the sale of Government salt by auction in certain factories; in Bengal (R9 lakhs) as the result of special endeavours made to arrange for larger supplies of imported salt in the current year by the provision of additional tonnage; and in Bombay (R6 lakhs) due to the removal of restrictions on the issue of Baragora salt with effect from the 1st February 1919.

Revised. 1918-19.

Budget, 1919-20.

22. The total issues of salt in 1919-20, imported as well as locally manufactured, are taken at 5,49 lakhs of maunds. In estimating however the net receipts of duty during the year, allowance has been made for the advance payments made in Northern India in previous years (the outstanding amount of which is still considerable) and for the discontinuance of auction sales in Madras. Inclusive of sale-proceeds of Government salt and other miscellaneous receipts, the Budget estimate of revenue for 1919-20 has accordingly been placed at ₹5,87.14 lakhs.

EXPENDITURE.

Revised, 1918-19.

23. The Revised estimate for 1918-19 exceeds the Budget by ₹9.81 lakhs. Part of the increase (₹2.21 lakhs) is due to the grant of war allowances to subordinate establishments in all the areas of local manufacture, viz., Northern India, Madras and Bombay. Among other causes of increase are (i) an extension of the Pritchard salt works (₹2.82 lakhs) and heavier bagging and sewing charges (₹2.90 lakhs) in Bombay and (ii) a scheme for controlling the price of salt in mofussil stations in Madras (₹1.10 lakhs). The last two items of expenditure will be largely set off by recoveries credited as salt revenue. The Budget estimate for 1919-20 is more than the Revised for the current year by ₹6.40 lakhs. It includes provision for the continuance of war allowances, for further expenditure on the extension of the Pritchard salt works (₹7.28 lakhs) and for the reorganisation of the combined salt and excise establishment (₹1 lakh) in Bombay, and for the scheme for controlling prices in Madras (₹1.70 lakhs). On the other hand, a decrease (₹2.58 lakhs) is anticipated in Northern India owing to the elimination of expenditure on the extension of salt works included in the Revised estimate.

REVENUE.

Revised, 1918-19. 24. The Revised estimate for the current year exceeds the Budget by R2.04 lakhs. The increase occurs in Delhi (R80,000) and other minor administrations (R1.34 lakhs) as the result of improved trade conditions.

Budget, 1919-20. The Budget estimate for 1919-20 is R93,000 more than the current year's Revised estimate.

(b) Divided.

Revised, 1918-19. 25. The total Revised for 1918-19 is less than the Budget by R5.26 lakhs. Increases are anticipated in Bombay (R13 lakhs) and Bengal (R7 lakhs), owing to the satisfactory conditions of local trade and industries during the greater part of the year, but they will be more than set off by a decline in almost all the other provinces attributable to stagnation in business and check to agriculture which have resulted from the influenza epidemic and unfavourable agricultural conditions. The decrease is largest in the United Provinces (R13 lakhs), Bihar and Orissa (R6 lakhs) and the Punjab (R3.20 lakhs). The revenue from non-judicial stamps is expected to be more than the Budget by R20 lakhs, but that derived from court-fee stamps will be less by R25 lakhs.

Budget, 1919-20. 26. The Budget for 1919-20 provides for a moderate growth in revenue in all the provinces in the expectation that the sales of court-fee stamps will show a recovery, and is taken at R26.15 lakhs higher than the Revised estimate for 1918-19.

EXPENDITURE.

27. The cost of all stamps and stamp paper supplied from England is charged under this head, and an adjustment is made in India transferring to Posts and Telegraphs the cost of stamps used for postal and telegraph purposes. Similarly the cost of revenue stamps supplied to Local Governments and Administrations is debited to them in the Provincial section of the accounts by per contra credit in the Imperial section under this head. The credits on both these accounts are shown against item I (ii) under expenditure in the table on the preceding page.

(a) Wholly Imperial (including outlay in England).

Revised, 1918-19. 28. The Revised estimate for 1918-19 exceeds the Budget by R3.66 lakhs owing to larger outlay in England on the manufacture of stamps. The decrease of R7.33 lakhs in the Budget for 1919-20 as compared with the Revised for the current year occurs almost entirely in the same item of expenditure.

Budget, 1919-20.

(b) Divided.

Revised, 1918-19. 29. The Revised estimate for the current year is less than the Budget by R1.13 lakhs. The decrease is attributed to smaller payments for discount on sales, following on the decline in the revenue from court-fee stamps. The Budget estimate for 1919-20 does not differ materially from the Revised for the current year.

REVENUE.

Revised, 1918-19. 30. The Revised estimate for 1918-19 exceeds the Budget by R9.99 lakhs. The increase occurs mainly in Bangalore, Ajmer, Indore and Baluchistan and is attributed to the large number of troops located in these areas and to the enhanced license fees realised at auction sales. The Budget estimate for 1919-20 provides for a further expansion of revenue and is taken at R5.52 lakhs more than the Revised for the current year; the largest increase occurs in the North-West Frontier Province (R2.53 lakhs) and is based on the high bids at recent auction sales of licenses.

(b) Divided and wholly Provincial.

Revised, 1918-19. 31. The Revised estimate for the current year is expected to exceed the Budget by no less than R28.15 lakhs. The increase is shared by all the provinces, but is largest in Madras (R43.04 lakhs) and Bombay (R33.50 lakhs). The unfavourable agricultural prospects in several provinces have not depressed the revenue, and the large advance appears to be due to the prohibitive prices prevailing for imported liquors and to a rise in the wages of the labouring population. An enhancement in duties accounts for part of the increase in Madras.

Budget, 1919-20. The total Budget for 1919-20 is taken at R82.29 lakhs more than the Revised for the current year. Enhanced duties will bring in a large increase of R35.82 lakhs in the United Provinces, and provision has been made for a moderate growth of revenue in the other provinces.

EXPENDITURE.

(a) Wholly Imperial.

32. The figures show little variation.

(b) Divided and wholly Provincial.

Revised, 1918-19. 33. The Revised estimate for the current year exceeds the Budget grant by R2.89 lakhs. The increase is due to the grant of compensation for high prices in Bombay and Madras, and to larger outlay on petty construction and repairs in the latter province. The Budget estimate for 1919-20 is more by R5.31 lakhs than the Revised for the current year. Provision has been made for compensation for high prices in Madras (R1.94 lakhs), the amalgamation and reorganisation of the non-gazetted establishment of the combined salt and excise department (R1 lakh) and the grant of house rent and other allowances to the excise inspecting staff (R72,000) in Bombay, and further expenditure on the reorganisation schemes in Bengal (R90,000) and Bihar and Orissa (R76,000). The decrease in Assam (R1.11 lakhs) is nominal, being due to the omission of a special payment included in the Revised estimate for the current year for compensation to the owners of the Jorhat distillery.

34. The increase of Rs 75,000 in the Budget estimate of Provincial revenue for 1919-20 as compared with the Revised estimate for the current year is due to the recovery expected in Bihar and Orissa of arrears in respect of the years 1915-16 and 1916-17. The estimates do not otherwise call for remark.

REVENUE.

35. The Revised estimate of Customs revenue in 1918-19 amounts to Revised, 1918-19. R18,60.48 lakhs or R2,38.32 lakhs more than the Budget estimate. Nearly one-third of the improvement occurs under the excise duty on cotton manufactures (R71 lakhs) owing to a heavy demand for piece-goods and high prices. The effect on the import trade of war restrictions and freight difficulties has been more than counterbalanced by a continued rise in the level of prices. The tariff heads other than the excise on cotton goods which show important excesses are sugar (R26.50 lakhs), tobacco (R21.75 lakhs), manufactured articles (R16 lakhs), cutlery and hardware (R14 lakhs), iron and steel (R13 lakhs), excise on motor spirit (R10.75 lakhs), and the export duties on jute and rice (R10 lakhs each). The only head which shows a material decline is petroleum (R22.30 lakhs).

36. The Budget estimate of Customs revenue in 1919-20 is taken at Budget, 1919-20. R20,02.86 lakhs, or R1,42.38 lakhs more than the Revised estimate for 1918-19. It is expected that shipping facilities will greatly improve and that as the result of demobilisation and the release of industries from war work there will be an increase in the volume of commodities available for import into India; on the other hand, regard must be had to the probability of some fall in prices and to the unfavourable agricultural conditions in several provinces. The estimates include important increases under spirits and liqueurs (R32 lakhs), manufactured articles (R29 lakhs), sugar (R23.50 lakhs), petroleum (R22.48 lakhs), and the export duty on jute (R20 lakhs). On the other hand, they allow for a falling off of R45 lakhs under the export duty on rice owing to the diversion of Burma rice for consumption in India and R15 and R21 lakhs respectively under the import and excise duties on cotton manufactures; the revenue under the last two heads has been specially high in the current year, and the present conditions of the market and the disparity between the prices in India and England point to the probability of some set-back here. The Budget estimate provides for the retention of the duty of 6 annas a gallon on motor spirit manufactured in, or imported into, India which was imposed as a temporary measure in February 1917.

EXPENDITURE.

37. The expenditure in 1918-19 is expected to exceed the Budget by Revised, 1918-19. R2.15 lakhs, owing mainly to the grant of war allowances to subordinate establishments in Madras and Bombay (R97,000) and larger expenditure on overtime and holiday allowances in Burma (R69,000) in connection with the export of rice for the Royal Commission on food supplies and to India. The Budget estimate for 1919-20 is more by R1.03 lakhs than the Revised for the current year, and includes a small allotment for the revision of the Karachi customs establishment. Budget, 1919-20.

REVENUE.(i) Excess profits duty—Imperial.

38. It has been decided to levy during the ensuing year a duty on excess profits from certain businesses, assessed at 50 per cent. of the profits realised in excess of a standard determined in accordance with the provisions of the Excess Profits Duty Act. The gross yield of the duty is estimated at R11·25 crores, of which R6·25 crores relate to Bengal and R4·25 crores to Bombay. Against this must be set off an estimated loss of R150 lakhs under super-tax as the result of the exemption from that tax of businesses paying excess profits duty and R70 lakhs under income-tax in respect of amounts paid as excess profits duty. The net receipts derived from the new tax are thus expected to amount to R9·05 crores including about R5½ crores from Bengal and R3½ crores from Bombay. Budget, 1919-20.

(ii) Super-tax—Imperial.

39. The Revised estimate for 1918-19 is taken at R91·93 lakhs more than the Budget. The increase is distributed over all the provinces except Assam, but is largest in Bengal (R33 lakhs) and Bombay (R27·04 lakhs). It is due generally to a rise in the incomes assessed to super-tax and to arrear collections in respect of the preceding year. Allowing for the exemption from super-tax of businesses paying excess profits duty, the revenue in the ensuing year is estimated at R1,47·40 lakhs or about half of the Revised estimate for the current year. Revised, 1918-19.
Budget, 1919-20.

(iii) Ordinary Income-tax.(a) Imperial.

40. The Revised estimate for the current year exceeds the Budget by R6·99 lakhs. The increase arises from improved assessment in Delhi and the employment of additional establishments by Government for work connected with the war, mainly in the Military department. The Budget estimate for 1919-20 allows for the loss of revenue which results from the raising of the assessable limit of income—vide paragraph 42 below—and is taken at R5·15 lakhs less than the Revised estimate for the current year. Revised, 1918-19.
Budget, 1919-20.

*(b) Divided.*Revised, 1918-19.

41. The Revised estimate for 1918-19 is more than the Budget by R49.22 lakhs, nearly half of the increase occurring in Bombay (R22 lakhs). The rise is attributable to larger profits realised in certain trades as the result of war conditions and would have been higher but for delay in collections in all provinces owing to the late introduction of the rules under the new Income-tax Act.

Budget, 1919-20.

42. In view of the hardships caused by high prices to persons with small incomes, it has been decided to exempt from assessment to income-tax, with effect from the ensuing year, incomes below R2,000 per annum. This measure will result in a loss of R68.70 lakhs in the divided portion of the revenue. As stated in paragraph 38 above, there will be a further loss estimated at R70 lakhs in respect of income which will be paid to Government as excess profits duty. Apart from these factors, a considerable rise in revenue is anticipated in 1919-20 as the result of the collection of arrears thrown forward from the current year, an increase in the trade profits which will come under assessment in the ensuing year and greater efficiency in assessments. The Budget estimate for 1919-20 is accordingly taken at only R38.64 lakhs less than the Revised estimate for 1918-19.

EXPENDITURE.

(a) Imperial.

43. The figures show little variation.

*(b) Divided.*Revised, 1918-19.

44. The Revised estimate for 1918-19 exceeds the Budget grant by R93,000 mainly in Bombay. The Budget estimate for 1919-20 provides for the strengthening of establishments in several provinces and is R5.61 lakhs more than the Revised for the current year. The bulk of the increase is due to provision for the reorganisation of establishments in the city of Bombay (R1.08 lakhs) and in the United Provinces, and for the debit to the head Income-tax of the cost of the entire staff employed on income-tax work in the latter province instead of part of the expenditure being shown under Land Revenue as hitherto.

Revised, 1918-19. 46. The increase of ₹7.85 lakhs in the revenue in the current year as compared with the Budget estimate occurs in Port Blair (₹4.33 lakhs) due to better prices realised for timber and larger supplies to the Indian Munitions Board, and in Coorg (₹3.02 lakhs), owing to increased extraction of timber by the newly constructed tramway and high prices for sandalwood. The Budget estimate for 1919-20 provides for a further growth of revenue in these administrations and is ₹4.36 lakhs more than the Revised for the current year.

Budget, 1919-20.

(b) Provincial.

Revised, 1918-19. 47. The Revised estimate for 1918-19 is more than the Budget by ₹25.14 lakhs. All the provinces except Madras and the Central Provinces contribute to the improvement, but it is largest in Bombay (₹15 lakhs) and the United Provinces (₹8 lakhs). The rise is due generally to increased demands for timber, resin, turpentine and other forest produce, mainly from the Military Department, the Munitions Board and Railways, and to the higher prices that have been realised. The supply of fodder to the districts affected by famine (₹4.16 lakhs) and the recovery of the cost of hay presses supplied to Mesopotamia account partly for the excess in Bombay. The decline in Madras (₹8.82 lakhs) arises from the transfer of the control of tanning materials to the Munitions Board which pays the Forest Department on the basis of past results and not of current prices.

Budget, 1919-20. 48. The Budget estimate for 1919-20 is ₹6.93 lakhs more than the Revised for the current year. A considerable increase (₹31 lakhs) is anticipated in the United Provinces from the new turpentine and resin factories which will commence working early next year, and from various administrative improvements which have been or are about to be carried out, e.g., the expansion of the sawmill with a view to increase the output of timber and to convert wood hitherto considered unsaleable into forms that will command a ready sale and the formation of a separate circle for exploiting the markets. Other large improvements occur in the Punjab (₹13.35 lakhs), Burma (₹11.09 lakhs) and Madras (₹9.73 lakhs), owing mainly to increased demands expected from railways, the Admiralty and other purchasers. A special receipt of ₹2.50 lakhs will accrue in Bombay from famine fodder operations. On the other hand, there will be decreases of revenue in Bengal (₹1.70 lakhs) and Bihar and Orissa (₹1 lakh) owing to a reduction in the indents from the Munitions Board.

EXPENDITURE.

(a) Imperial (including outlay in England.)

Revised, 1918-19. 49. The increase of ₹4.29 lakhs in the Revised estimate for the current year as compared with the Budget is due to the construction of a tramway in Coorg. The Budget for 1919-20 exceeds the Revised estimate for 1918-19 by ₹8.26 lakhs. It provides for further expenditure on the Coorg tramway (₹3.44 lakhs), for the improvement and extension of forests in Port Blair (₹6.50 lakhs), and for some increase in ordinary expenditure.

Budget, 1919-20.

(b) Provincial.

Revised, 1918-19. 50. The Revised estimate for 1918-19 is more than the Budget by ₹30.45 lakhs, mainly in Bombay (₹12.62 lakhs) and the United Provinces (₹11.23 lakhs). The growth in expenditure is generally a concomitant of the larger revenue obtained from the sale of forest produce. Among special causes may be mentioned (i) the grant of compensation for high prices to subordinate establishments (₹6.09 lakhs), mainly in Bombay and Madras, (ii) expenditure on famine fodder operations in Bombay (₹7.20 lakhs) and on hay presses in replacement of those sent to Mesopotamia (₹88,000) and (iii) outlay on the administrative improvements in the United Provinces mentioned in paragraph 48.

51. The total Budget estimate for 1919-20 exceeds the Revised for the current year by Rs 506 lakhs. The bulk of the increase occurs in the United Provinces (Rs 19.61 lakhs), Burma (Rs 9.54 lakhs) and the Punjab (Rs 7.23 lakhs). Provision has been made for various measures of development in view of the growing demands for forest produce. Grants have been allotted, among other objects, for special expenditure on the turnery and sawmill, resin distillery and wood-working institute in the United Provinces (Rs 15.32 lakhs), for increased outlay on the sawing and carriage of sleepers in the same province (Rs 4 lakhs), for the floating and rafting of timber cut in 1918-19 in the Punjab (Rs 3.67 lakhs), for the installation of mechanical appliances for handling logs at the Rangoon timber depôt (Rs 2 lakhs), for the reorganisation of forest establishments in Madras (Rs 1.25 lakhs) and Bihar and Orissa (Rs 35,000), and for compensation for high prices (Rs 5.42 lakhs), mainly in Bombay and Madras. Bombay and Bengal are the only provinces where there will be a reduction in total expenditure owing to a smaller provision for famine fodder operations in the former province and to a fall in the supplies to the Munitions Board in the latter.

53. The Revised estimate for 1918-19 is R1.47 lakhs more than the Budget Revised, 1918-19. forecast; the increase occurs mainly in Bombay (R1.70 lakhs) and Madras (R1.10 lakhs), partly set off by minor decreases in almost all the other provinces. Provision for a growth of revenue in 1919-20 has been made in Bihar and Budget, 1919-20. Orissa, Madras and Bombay, and the Budget for that year exceeds the Revised estimate for 1918-19 by R2.26 lakhs.

54. The figures show little variation.

Provincial.

55. The Revised estimate for 1918-19 exceeds the Budget estimate by Revised, 1918-19. R2.28 lakhs, the increase being due mainly to the grant of compensation for high prices and revision of the pay of the clerical establishment in Madras. The Budget for 1919-20 is more than the Revised estimate for the current Budget, 1919-20. year by R2.11 lakhs. It includes a provision of R1.40 lakhs for compensation for high prices in Madras and lump allotments for minor schemes of revision in that province and in Bengal.

56. The revenue recorded under this head represents tributes received from the protected States, in several cases as a result of exchanges of territory and settlement of claims, and contributions made chiefly in lieu of former obligation to supply or maintain troops. The figures do not ordinarily show any important fluctuations from year to year except for advance payment of sums falling due in the ensuing year, or arrears and their recovery. The decrease in the Revised estimate for the current year as compared with the Budget occurs in Bombay as the result of the unfavourable agricultural conditions. The Budget estimate for 1919-20 provides for normal collections:

(a) Imperial.

57. The wholly Imperial expenditure shown against "Other Provinces" represents refunds and drawbacks in respect of wholly Imperial revenue (e. g., Opium, Salt, Super-tax, Customs and Tributes). The large increase of Rs. 1,05,001 lakhs in the Revised estimate over the Budget for 1918-19 occurs mainly under Salt (Rs. 62.94 lakhs), Customs (Rs. 38.18 lakhs) and Super-tax (Rs. 4.24 lakhs) refunds. The excess under the first head is due to the refund to salt traders in Northern India of duty paid by them in advance in previous years; allowance for the payments was made on the revenue side in the current year's Budget (vide paragraph 21). Owing to shipping difficulties a large quantity of merchandise destined for other countries was in the current year imported into Indian ports in the first instance; the increase under Customs refunds arises partly from this cause and partly from the collection of import duties on a provisional basis, owing to delay in the receipt of shipping documents, subject to re-adjustment on receipt of the latter. The Budget estimate for 1919-20 assumes normal refunds of Salt revenue and a decrease under Customs refunds following on an anticipated reduction in re-exports owing to improved shipping facilities.

(b) Divided and Provincial.

58. The expenditure varies considerably from year to year and is difficult to estimate. In 1918-19 the Budget will be exceeded by Rs. 4.16 lakhs owing to higher refunds of income-tax revenue in several provinces and a special land revenue refund in Madras. The Budget estimate for 1919-20 includes a provision of Rs. 5 lakhs in Bombay for refund of excise license fees to shopkeepers who had to close their shops owing to the temporary failure of supplies of country spirits; and in Madras allowance has been made for the special payment included in the Revised for the current year. The estimates for the other provinces generally follow the Revised estimate.

(a) Imperial.

59. The wholly Imperial expenditure shown against "Other Provinces" represents Opium, Salt and Customs compensations paid to Indian States and Foreign Governments, as well as Miscellaneous compensations (i.e., those of a general character and not intended to indemnify against loss of a particular kind of revenue) in provinces other than Bombay. The variations between the Budget and Revised estimates of the current year and between the latter and the Budget of next year are, generally speaking, due to the fact that the salt royalty payable to Jaipur and Jodhpur and the customs compensation payable to Travancore and Cochin fluctuate respectively with reference to the actual sales of salt and the actual realisations of customs revenue.

(b) Divided and Provincial.

Revised, 1918-19.

Budget, 1919-20.

60. The Revised estimate for 1918-19 exceeds the Budget by Rs 1.64 lakhs owing to arrear payments in Bombay in respect of compensation for lease of the revenue from hemp drugs and an increase in the assessment of alienated lands in the same province due to revised survey and settlement rates introduced in certain districts. The Budget estimate for 1919-20 does not differ materially from the Revised for the current year.

*(a) India—Imperial.*Revised, 1918-19.

61. The Revised estimate for 1918-19 is more than the Budget by Rs 24.73 lakhs. The bulk of the increase represents discount on British and Indian treasury bills tendered in payment of subscriptions to the war loan (Rs 7.86 lakhs), and larger interest (Rs 15.51 lakhs) realised from securities of railway companies' provident funds taken over by Government, owing to recovery of arrears in respect of funds already transferred and to further transfers of provident funds during the current year. An excess of Rs 1.34 lakhs in the receipts on account of Imperial loans and advances is partly counterbalanced by a reduction in the interest on the overdrawn capital of railway companies (Rs 86,000).

Budget, 1919-20.

62. The Budget for 1919-20 is taken at Rs 18.30 lakhs more than the Revised for the current year. The special receipts in the current year in connection with provident funds and the tender of treasury bills as subscription to the war loan have been eliminated, but the profits on paper currency circulation will be higher by Rs 32 lakhs owing to the issue to the Paper Currency Reserve during the current year of Indian treasury bills of the face value of Rs 6.40 crore.

*(b) India—Provincial.*Revised, 1918-19.

63. The Revised estimate for 1918-19 is Rs 3.98 lakhs less than the Budget. The decrease occurs mainly in Bombay (Rs 1.56 lakhs) and the United Provinces (Rs 99,000) and is due to the postponement of recoveries in respect of advances to cultivators owing to the unfavourable agricultural conditions. The Budget estimate for 1919-20 provides for an increase of Rs 10.14 lakhs owing to anticipated recoveries in respect of the large agricultural advances which have been granted in the current year. The bulk of the increase (Rs 7.20 lakhs) is expected in the United Provinces.

Budget, 1919-20.

*(c) England.*Revised, 1918-19.

64. The interest receipts in England in 1918-19 are likely to exceed the Budget estimate by £151,900. The rise is due to increased investments on behalf of the Paper Currency Reserve and recoveries of arrears in respect of advances to the Imperial Bank of Persia for the purposes of the Persian Government, partly counterbalanced by a decline in the interest from investments on behalf of the Special Reserve.

Budget, 1919-20.

65. The interest receipts are taken in the Budget estimate for 1919-20 at £2,376,500 or £395,000 less than in the Revised for the current year. The interest on Paper Currency Reserve investments will be higher by £224,000 as a full year's interest will be realised in respect of the additional investments made in the current year. On the other hand, there will be a large decline of £481,400 in the receipts from the Special Reserve as it is anticipated that the securities held in the reserve will have to be sold during the course of the current and next years in order to finance the requirements of the Home treasury. The interest on the cash balances of the Home treasury and on advances to the Imperial Bank of Persia is also expected to be less than in the current year by £135,000.

Interest on Ordinary debt.Revised, 1918-19.

66. The expenditure in 1918-19 on account of interest payable on the public debt as a whole will exceed the Budget estimate by Rs 59.67 lakhs (£397,800). In view of the large deficit in the Imperial revenue account now anticipated for the current year, no appropriation is being made from revenue towards the sinking fund for the discharge of the British war debt for which India has assumed liability in connection with her contribution of £100 millions to the cost of the war. But for this, the aggregate interest charges would have exceeded the Budget provision by Rs 130.43 lakhs (£869,600), due mainly to larger discount on treasury bills (Rs 92 lakhs = £613,300), to interest on ways and means advances aggregating Rs 17 crores obtained from Presidency Banks in the latter part of the year (Rs 20 lakhs = £133,000), and to a rise in other interest payments (Rs 8 lakhs = £53,300) in connection with the conversion operations of our first war loan. Apart from these items, the charges for the service of the second Indian war loan for which the Budget included a provision of Rs 100 lakhs (£666,700) are now expected to amount to Rs 160 lakhs (£1,066,700) owing to the proceeds of the loan being considerably larger than the figure assumed in the Budget. The excess in interest expenditure in India on this account will however be largely counterbalanced by a saving in England (Rs 48.52 lakhs = £323,500) in the provision for dividends in respect of India's share of the British war debt, the resultant net increase over the Budget figure for interest as a result of these changes being thus Rs 11.48 lakhs (£76,500).

Budget, 1919-20.

67. In the Budget for 1919-20, provision has been made for a full year's interest on the second Indian war loan raised in the current year. A sum of Rs 70 lakhs (£466,700) has been set aside for the service of the rupee loan to be floated in the coming year, and a further sum of Rs 1.05 lakh (£700,000) for the discount on the treasury bills which it is anticipated will be sold during the course of 1919-20 in partial replacement of those issued in the current year. Provision has also been entered for the dividends due on the undischarged balance of India's share of the British war debt and for a sinking fund appropriation of £633,700.

68. The following statement shows the details of the charges now anticipated in the current and next years for the service of India's £100 million contribution to the cost of the war:—

Accounts.*

69. The amount of interest transferred to the Railway and Irrigation sections of the accounts depends, firstly, on the capital expenditure; secondly, on the actual payment of interest on that portion of the debt which has been incurred specifically on account of the construction or purchase of railways or irrigation works; and, thirdly, on the rate at which interest is charged on that portion of the debt which has not been specifically raised for the above or other purpose. Our practice is to adopt, for this adjustment, the average rate of interest actually paid in respect of the whole of the non-specific debt in the latest year for which complete accounts are available. The result is that the rate adopted in calculating the Revised estimate for a year is generally somewhat different from that used for the Budget estimate: and this usually leads to a difference between the two estimates apart from that caused by a variation in the capital expenditure itself.

The increase of R63·81 lakhs (£425,400) in the Revised estimate of total interest to be transferred in 1918-19, as compared with the Budget, is due to an increase in the rate as well as in the capital at charge at the end of 1918-19. The increase in the total amount of interest to be transferred in 1919-20 over the Revised estimate for 1918-19 is almost wholly due to the progress of capital expenditure.

A portion of the interest on Ordinary Debt appears in the Provincial section of the accounts. Provincial Governments are authorised to grant advances to cultivators (as well as to certain other people in special cases) under various Acts, to Indian States, to landholders and notabilities apart from the provisions of any law and to municipalities and local bodies (other than Presidency Corporations), out of amounts annually placed at their disposal by the Government of India. The interest actually levied on such advances is credited as Provincial revenue. But interest at a fixed rate is charged to the local Governments on the mean between the outstanding balances of the Provincial Loan Accounts at the commencement of the year and at its close; and this is done by transferring the amount so calculated from the Imperial to the Provincial section under Interest on Ordinary Debt. The differences between the Budget and the Revised estimates of the amount to be transferred to the Provincial Section in the current year, and between the latter and the Budget estimate of 1919-20, are explained by the variations in the outstanding balances of the Provincial Loan Account as shown in the table under head XII.—Interest receipts.

Interest on other obligations.

71. The total expenditure in 1918-19 is likely to exceed the Budget by R16·48 lakhs (£109,900) owing mainly to an increase in the interest payable in respect of the provident funds of railway companies in consequence of further transfer of these funds to Government during the current year. The Budget estimate for 1919-20 provides for an increase of R17·86 lakhs (£119,000) over the Revised for 1918-19. It is attributable to an anticipated growth in the deposits in state and railway companies' provident funds and to provision for a special arrear payment (R5·96 lakhs) of certain wasika pensions which have remained undrawn since the outbreak of the war.

REVENUE.

(a) Indian Postal and Telegraph Department.

72. The Revised estimate for 1918-19 exceeds the Budget by R67·15 lakhs (£447,700). There will be no receipts in England in the current year under the Money award in connection with the Eastern Mail Service against R7·50 lakhs anticipated in the Budget. The improvement in India thus amounts to about R75 lakhs and is due to a large expansion of internal business, a growth in the revenue from state messages owing to war conditions and increased rates introduced during the year for foreign postage and inland letters, parcels and telegrams. Revised, 1918-19.

73. The Budget estimate for 1919-20 provides for a further advance of R52·2 lakhs in the collections in India. There will be a fall in military traffic brought about by war conditions, but it will be more than made up by the normal growth in revenue and a full year's yield of the increased rates introduced in the current year. A receipt of R7·50 lakhs is also anticipated in England in connection with the Eastern Mail Service. Budget, 1919-20.

(b) Indo-European Telegraph Department.

74. An increase of R13·87 lakhs (£92,400) in the revenue is anticipated in the current year as compared with the Budget owing to an expansion of traffic with Persia and adjacent countries. The Budget estimate for 1919-20 does not differ materially from the Revised for the current year. Revised, 1918-19.
Budget, 1919-20.

EXPENDITURE.

(a) Indian Postal and Telegraph Department.

75. The expenditure in 1918-19 is likely to exceed the Budget grant by R24·91 lakhs (£166,100). The increase is mainly due to a rise in the cost of allowances granted to subordinate establishments as compensation for high prices, the improvement of motor-car services, larger outlay on stationery and printing owing to a rise in prices, and payments for stores returned from Mesopotamia, partly counterbalanced by a saving in the provision for the purchase of stores in England. Revised, 1918-19.

76. The Budget grant for 1919-20 exceeds the Revised for the current year by the large sum of R67·64 lakhs (£450,900). The outlay in England will be higher by R42·33 lakhs owing to higher prices for stores and a larger demand to replenish stocks depleted by supplies for military requirements. Provision has also been made in India for various schemes of revision of pay and reorganisation of establishments costing about R15 lakhs, for the continuance of the war allowances and for further expenditure (R6 lakhs) on the motor services. The credits for stores supplied to other departments will be less by R8 lakhs owing to reduced demands following on the termination of the war. Apart from these special items, the Budget estimate provides for sanctioned establishments and normal working expenses, together with a margin for the development of the operations of the department which are generally remunerative in character. Budget, 1919-20.

(b) Indo-European Telegraph Department.

77. The Revised estimate for 1918-19 exceeds the Budget by R2·85 lakhs (£19,000), the rise being due to the reorganisation of establishments, the grant of compensation for high prices and for variations in the exchange rates for the kran and the dollar, and a reduction in the net receipts in England in connection with the joint purse arrangement, etc., partly counterbalanced by a lapse in the grant for capital outlay owing to the postponement of works. The Budget estimate for 1919-20 is taken at R1·92 lakhs (£12,800) more than the Revised for the current year. An increase in the capital outlay on the construction of telegraph lines will be met from a contribution from the British Exchequer for the Jask-Lingah and Bunder-Abbas Kerman lines. Revised, 1918-19.

Revised, 1918-19.

78. The Revised estimate for the current year exceeds the Budget by R1,95·12 lakhs. Of this increase R75 lakhs are contributed by the seignorage on 52½ crores of rupees which it is expected to coin in the current year from the silver obtained from America under the Plattman Act, and from purchases made by the Secretary of State in the market. The balance of the increase is mainly derived from the profit on the circulation of nickel and bronze coins (R1,16·50 lakhs); there has been an extraordinary demand for subsidiary coinage, especially nickel, during the current year as the result apparently of the increased circulation of notes and of the concurrent restrictions which it was necessary to impose on the encashment of currency notes by district treasuries. There will also be a receipt of R2 lakhs in respect of re-coinage undertaken for the Straits Government, and the heavy coinage of rupees will result in an increase in the operative gains included under "other items" in the above table; but the latter will be counterbalanced by an increase in the debits on account of operative losses.

79. The Budget estimate for 1919-20 is taken at ₹48·04 lakhs less than the Revised estimate for 1918-19. Provision is made for a seignorage receipt of ₹98 lakhs from the coinage of the balance of the silver to be received under the Pittman Act and a moderate purchase in the market, and for a profit of ₹1·00 lakhs from the circulation of subsidiary coinage for which demand will continue to be heavy. Budget, 1919-20.

EXPENDITURE.

80. The excess of ₹14·55 lakhs in the expenditure in the current year over the Budget estimate arises from the heavy coinage of rupees and small coin. The Budget for 1919-20 provides for a small excess of ₹2·62 lakhs over the Revised, which occurs in the cost of stores obtained from England. Revised, 1918-19.

81. The expenditure in 1918-19 is likely to exceed the Budget grant by Rs 36 lakhs. Apart from the grant of compensation for high prices, mainly in Bombay and Madras, the rise is due to (a) an increase in the charges of the civil accounts department (Rs 32 lakhs) owing to the cost of advertising the Indian war loan, for which provision was included in the Budget under "Interest on debt", partly set off by a contribution for audit and account establishment employed on public works expenditure adjusted in reduction of the charges under this head under a revised procedure for the distribution of the establishment charges of the Public Works Department which has been introduced in the current year; (b) larger expenditure on account of the Secretariats owing to the employment of officers on special duty in connection with the war and the question of constitutional reforms (Rs 2.02 lakhs); (c) an excess in the allowance payable to the Presidency Banks owing to increased public debt work, chiefly in connection with the conversion operations associated with the first war loan (Rs 49 lakhs); and (d) larger expenditure on the Currency Department, owing to the printing of treasury bill forms and the currency difficulties of the year (Rs 73 lakhs). The Budget estimate for 1919-20 provides generally for sanctioned establishments and normal charges. The decrease of Rs 39 lakhs as compared with the Revised estimate for the current year is due to the omission of the special items of expenditure incurred in 1918-19, namely, the advertisement of the war loan and the extra payment to the Presidency Banks. The charges of the Secretariats show a rise instead of a reduction owing to the inclusion of provision in the Budget for the ensuing year for an investigation into the hydro-electric potentialities of India (Rs 86 lakhs) in pursuance of the recommendations of the Industrial Commission.

Budget, 1919-20.(b) India—Provincial.

82. The total Revised for 1918-19 will exceed the Budget grant by Rs 21 lakhs, owing generally to the employment of officers on special duty in the Secretariats and the grant of compensation for high prices. The total Budget estimate for 1919-20 is Rs 16 lakhs more than the Revised for the current year. The increase is mainly due to provision made for outlay on furniture for the Government houses in Madras (Rs 75,000) and Bombay (Rs 69,000) and for the construction of a new saloon for the Governor of Bengal (Rs 35,000).

Revised, 1918-19.Budget, 1919-20.(c) England.

83. The Revised estimate for 1918-19 exceeds the Budget by £114,600. The cost of stores supplied to India will be higher by £80,000 owing to the postponement to the current year of payments for the manufacture of currency notes for Re. 1 and Rs 2½, and an expenditure of £4,800 is due to the visit of the Secretary of State to India and the deputation allowance of a representative attending the Imperial War Conference and the Peace Conference. There will also be a rise of £25,900 in the charges of the Secretary of State's establishment due mainly to higher salaries necessitated by the exigencies of the war, larger payments for professional inspection of stores, an increase in the wages of labourers at the India Store Depot and the addition of a new storey to the India Office building. The Budget estimate for 1919-20 is less than the Revised for the current year by £82,400, owing mainly to the omission of the expenditure in the current year in connection with the Secretary of State's visit to India and the arrear payments for note forms.

85. The Revised estimate for 1918-19 exceeds the Budget by R6.33 lakhs. Revised, 1918-19. Every expenditure amounting to R16.93 lakhs has been necessitated in all provinces except Burma and Assam on account of compensation for high prices. Increases also occur in respect of fees paid to pleaders in the High Court and munsif courts in Bengal and in connection with a riot case in the United Provinces. The excess due to these causes will be met in part from savings in the grants for other items of ordinary expenditure and owing to the non-utilisation of the lump provision made in the Budget for additional judges in Bengal.

86. The Budget estimate for 1919-20 is R14.85 lakhs more than the Budget, 1919-20. Revised estimate for 1918-19. The excess is distributed over all provinces except the United and Central Provinces and Assam. Provision has generally been made for the normal charges of sanctioned establishments, and a sum of R17.93 lakhs in all has been set apart under this head for compensation to subordinate establishments for high prices. Grants have also been allotted in Madras (R1.85 lakhs) for a permanent increase in the number of civil courts and consequent re-grading of sub-judges and munsiffs, the revision of pay of clerical establishments and additional process-service establishments; in the Punjab (R1.26 lakhs) for the conversion of the Punjab Chief Court into a High Court and revision of the process-service establishment; in Bengal (R1.25 lakhs) for the improvement of the pay of ministerial establishments; in Bombay for various extra appointments and minor reforms; and in the United Provinces (R1,40,000) for an additional judicial commissioner and for the riot case mentioned in the preceding paragraph.

88. The revenue in the current year will fall short of the Budget by R4 Revised, 1918-1 lakhs owing to a drop in magisterial fines in Madras, Bengal and the Punjab Budget, 1919-20 and in the receipts of the Administrator-General in Bengal. The Budget estimate for 1919-20 anticipates a recovery in these provinces from the set back in the current year.

EXPENDITURE.

(a) Imperial.

89. The decrease of R1 lakh in the Revised estimate for the current year Revised, 1918-19. as compared with the Budget occurs mainly under commissariat supplies in Port Blair. The Budget for 1919-20 does not differ materially from the Budget, 1919-20. Revised estimate for the current year.

(b) Provincial.

90. The total expenditure in 1918-19 is likely to exceed the Budget grant Revised, 1918-19. by R26.70 lakhs. An excess of R14.87 lakhs will occur in the purchase of raw materials, in all provinces except Burma and Assam, due to increased orders from the Military and other Departments for jail-made articles and to a rise in prices. There will also be an increase of R11.95 lakhs in the ordinary charges of jails, mainly in Bombay (R4.15 lakhs), the United Provinces (R2.04 lakhs) and Bihar and Orissa (R2.76 lakhs), as the result of a rise in dietary and clothing expenses owing to higher prices, and in some provinces to a larger jail population and the grant of compensation for high prices to subordinate establishments.

91. The Budget for 1919-20 is less than the Revised of the current year by Budget, 1919-20. R12.04 lakhs. The grant is generally based on the sanctioned scales of establishment, the probable jail population and the estimated outlay on raw materials, the reduction in expenditure being due to an anticipated decline in the demand for jail supplies to the Military and other Departments. Provision has generally been made for a rise in dietary charges, and the Budget estimate in the United Provinces includes an increased grant for the reformation of criminal tribes, mainly for a new settlement at Cawnpore (R1.08 lakhs).

REVENUE.

(a) Imperial.

92. The excess of R4.44 lakhs in the Revised estimate for the current year Revised, 1918-19. as compared with the Budget occurs mainly in Port Blair owing to increased receipts from jail supplies, hire of convicts and freight on rice and coal shipped by the S. S. "Maharaja". The Budget estimate for 1919-20 closely Budget, 1919-20. follows the Revised for 1918-19.

(b) Provincial.

93. The increase of R11.32 lakhs in the revenue in the current year over Revised, 1918-19. the Budget estimate is mainly due to heavy supplies of jail-made articles to the Military and other Departments in Madras, the United Provinces and Bihar and Orissa. Special receipts have also accrued in the Punjab and Bombay from the supply of convict labour to arsenals, military works, etc. The Budget estimate Budget, 1919-20. for 1919-20 provides for a large decrease in the demands for jail-made articles from other departments, and is taken at R11.56 lakhs less than the Revised estimate for the current year.

94. The Revised estimate for 1918-19 is less than the Budget by Revised, 1918-19.
 R2·07 lakhs. The saving is mainly due to temporary vacancies in the executive force in the North-West Frontier Province. The Budget estimate for Budget, 1919-20.
 1919-20 exceeds the Revised for the current year by R2·20 lakhs owing to increased provision for the executive force in the same province.

95. The Revised estimate for the current year is expected to be more than Revised, 1918-19.
 the Budget grant by R28·02 lakhs. Expenditure amounting to R24·81 lakhs is expected in connection with the grant of compensation for high prices in several provinces, the largest provision being required in Bombay (R9·31 lakhs), the Punjab (R4·57 lakhs) and the United Provinces (R3·80 lakhs). The operations against the Kuki tribe will result in an increased outlay of R11·17 lakhs in Burma and R17·83 lakhs in Assam; but the extra expenditure will be refunded to Provincial revenues by an assignment under the transfer head as only the normal cost of the forces engaged in the operations is treated as Provincial expenditure. Part of the larger outlay due to these causes will be met from savings in ordinary expenditure following mainly on vacancies in the district executive force, and lapses in the lump allotments included in the Budget estimates in several provinces for additional police and reforms; there will also be a decrease in expenditure in Bengal owing to a transfer of grants from this head to Civil Works expenditure for the construction of police buildings.

96. The Budget estimate for 1919-20 is taken at R42·84 lakhs more than Budget, 1919-20.
 the Revised for the current year. The excess is distributed over all the provinces except Burma and the Central Provinces. The decrease in the latter province is nominal, due to provision for compensation for high prices during the next year having been entered under Miscellaneous expenditure, while the reduction in Burma occurs in the cost of the Kuki operations. Bombay and Madras show the largest increases, R29 and R16 lakhs respectively, due to an enhanced grant for compensation for high prices; the total provision for this item of expenditure in the estimates for the next year amounts to R44·18 lakhs for the provinces collectively. The Budget estimate provides for the full cost of sanctioned establishments and of the various schemes of reform already introduced. A provision of R5·10 lakhs has also been made in Bengal and the United and Central Provinces for the revised rates of pay recently sanctioned for the Imperial Police Service. Among objects for which special allotments have been made may be mentioned the re-organisation of the presidency and district police in Bombay (R9·22 lakhs), the entertainment of additional police force in Bengal (R3·55 lakhs) and increased outlay on the reclamation of criminal tribes in the Punjab (R1·20 lakhs). The outlay on the Kuki operations during the next year in excess of the normal cost of the forces employed on them is estimated at R12 lakhs.

 due to increased recoveries for punitive police in Burma and the Punjab and a special receipt (R57,000) in Bengal on account of compensation received from the Military Department for police launches lent. The Budget estimate for 1919-20 is less than the Revised for the current year Budget, 1919-20.
 by R9·01 lakhs; the decrease occurs in Bihar and Orissa (R6·87 lakhs) and Burma (R2·03 lakhs) where the recoveries for punitive police are specially high in the current year and provision for normal receipts has been made for 1919-20.

Revised, 1918-19. 99. The total Revised estimate for 1918-19 exceeds the Budget by R84,000. An increase of R1.35 lakhs in Bengal owing to a grant of R1 lakh for the improvement of the Chittagong port and a larger payment of allowances to pilots is partly counterbalanced by a decrease in the outlay on marine stores and light-houses in Burma (R69,000). The Budget estimate for 1919-20 is more by R1.96 lakhs than the Revised for the current year. Increased provision is made in Bengal and Burma for the charges of pilotage establishments and the purchase of marine stores, but there will be a partial set-off from the omission of the grant to the Chittagong port included in the Revised estimate for the current year.

Budget, 1919-20.

REVENUE.

Revised, 1918-19. 100. The increase of R4.14 lakhs in the revenue in 1918-19 as compared with the Budget estimate is due to a rise in pilotage receipts in Bengal following on an improvement in sea-borne trade, and special receipts in Burma (R1.69 lakhs) on account of compensation awarded by the Military Department for steam launches impressed for service in Mesopotamia, and in Bengal (R58,000) from the hire of pilot vessels lent to the Military Department. The Budget estimate for 1919-20 is less than the Revised for the current year by R1.64 lakhs. The special receipts in the current year have been eliminated and some allowance made for an expansion in pilotage receipts.

EXPENDITURE.

(a) *Imperial—India and England.*Revised, 1918-19.

101. The Revised estimate for 1918-19 is less than the Budget by R49,000. A nominal saving of R1.04 lakhs due to allotments to Provincial Governments for non-recurring outlay out of the reserve provision of R2.77 lakhs entered in the Budget will be partly set off by larger expenditure in England owing to an extension of the period of deputation of the members of the Calcutta University Commission.

102. The reserve of R2.77 lakhs provided in the Budget for 1918-19 out of the recurring appropriation of R184 lakhs made from Imperial revenues up to the end of the current year for the improvement of education (exclusive of the grant of R30 lakhs for technical and agricultural education referred to below) will be utilised as follows:—

	Lakhs of R.
(i) Assigned to Provincial Governments for non-recurring expenditure	1.04
(ii) Allotted to minor administrations, etc., for—
(a) recurring expenditure25
(b) non-recurring expenditure79
(iii) Balance which is likely to be allotted to definite objects before the close of the year69
Total	2.77

The grant of R30 lakhs for technical and agricultural education for which an additional allotment was sanctioned after the Budget estimates were finally settled, has been assigned in full to Provincial Governments for non-recurring outlay during the course of the year—vide paragraph 227.

Budget, 1919-20.

103. The Budget estimate for 1919-20 exceeds the Revised for the current year by R32.83 lakhs, the increase being mainly due to provision under this head for the recurring grant of R30 lakhs for technical and agricultural education pending its allotment to definite objects; and a reserve of R3.07 lakhs.

104. Of the special appropriation of R214 lakhs (including the previous grants aggregating R184 lakhs referred to in paragraph 102 above and the grant of R30 lakhs for technical and agricultural education), R172.65 lakhs have already been distributed among the various provinces, etc., to meet recurring expenditure. The balance of R41.35 lakhs has been allotted as follows in the Budget estimate of the ensuing year:—

	Lakhs of R.
(i) Assigned to Provincial Governments for non-recurring expenditure38
(ii) Allotted to minor administrations	7.90
(iii) Lump provision for technical and agricultural education	30.00
(iv) Reserve	3.07

(b) *Provincial.*Revised, 1918-19.

105. The total expenditure in 1918-19 is expected to be R36.75 lakhs less than the Budget estimate. The latter included special allotments under this head, aggregating about R1.75 lakhs, from the recurring and non-recurring assignments made from Imperial revenues in recent years for the development and improvement of education. These allotments are expected to be utilised to the extent of about R1.64 lakhs, R1.58 lakhs of the expenditure being recorded under Education, and the balance under Civil Works. Under the former head, there is thus a decrease of R17 lakhs as compared with the Budget provision in the outlay from special Imperial grants; and the expenditure from other provincial resources will accordingly fall short of the corresponding Budget provision by about Rs 20 lakhs. This decrease is chiefly due to lapses in ordinary grants in Bengal, Bombay, Bihar and Orissa and Madras, partly counterbalanced by increased expenditure in the United Provinces. The lapse would have been higher but for outlay on compensation for high prices (Rs 4.69 lakhs) and a grant to the Khalsa College, Amritsar (Rs 3 lakhs).

106. The Budget estimate for 1919-20 exceeds the Revised for the current year by Rs 1,04.47 lakhs. The expenditure in 1919-20 from the previous Imperial assignments will be about Rs 45 lakhs more than in 1918-19, the provision made in the Budget under Education amounting to Rs 2,03 lakhs against a probable outlay of Rs 1,58 lakhs in the current year. The provision in the Budget for 1919-20 for expenditure from ordinary provincial resources is thus about Rs 60 lakhs more than in the Revised of the current year. The increase is distributed over almost all the provinces, but is largest in Madras (Rs 19½ lakhs), Bombay (Rs 18½ lakhs) and the United Provinces (Rs 14 lakhs). The estimates include provision for an expansion of the expenditure on education in various directions, chiefly by grants to schools. Special allotments have been made in Madras of (i) Rs 6.35 lakhs for grants to local bodies for buildings for secondary and elementary schools, (ii) Rs 2 lakhs for the equipment of secondary schools and (iii) Rs 1 lakh for University buildings; in Bombay of Rs 1 lakh each for (i) the equipment of the Royal Institute of Science, (ii) the opening of new Government High Schools and (iii) the Karnatak College building and hostel; Rs 3 lakhs in Bengal for University reforms to carry out the recommendations of the Calcutta University Commission; and Rs 4 lakhs in the Punjab for grants to local bodies for vernacular school buildings and vernacular education.

107. The following table shows the progress made by the Provincial Governments in utilising the various non-recurring grants given from Imperial revenues in recent years. To simplify the position, it has been assumed that the whole of the recurring grants for any year are fully utilised before any expenditure is debited against the non-recurring grants. The minus figure shown against some provinces in 1918-19 indicates that they will not spend their recurring grants in full during that year.

Provincial Governments have been authorised to draw to a moderate extent upon their accumulated balances during the next year for such important purposes as the extension of education, etc., expenditure on which has been specially hampered by war economies. The effect of these orders is reflected in the increased provision made in almost all the Provinces for educational expenditure out of the unspent balances of Imperial grants as well as from ordinary Provincial resources during the ensuing year.

Revised, 1918-19.

Budget, 1919-20.

109. The Revised estimate for 1918-19 falls short of the Budget by R1·31 lakhs owing mainly to the postponement till the next year of the transfer of certain secondary schools to Government for which provision was made in the Budget. There are also minor decreases in the income from fees in several provinces owing to the prevalence of the influenza epidemic. The Budget estimate for 1919-20 is more than the Revised for the current year by R2·99 lakhs. Provision has been made for fees from private and local fund schools to be taken over under Government management during the next year in Madras, the United Provinces and the Central Provinces and from new secondary colleges to be opened in the Punjab.

(a) Imperial (India and England).

111. The Revised estimate for the current year does not differ materially from the Budget. The Budget for 1919-20 provides for an increased expenditure on hospitals and dispensaries in the North-West Frontier Province for the construction of new hospitals in Baluchistan and larger outlay on stores in England, owing partly to an increased purchase in order to replenish stocks depleted during the war and partly to the transfer to this head in the Budget for the next year of some expenditure for which provision has been included under Scientific and miscellaneous departments in the Revised estimate for 1918-19.

Revised, 1918-19.Budget, 1919-20.(b) Provincial.

112. The expenditure in 1918-19 is expected to be more than the Budget by R2.59 lakhs. The increases occur in Bombay (R1.25 lakhs) due to the grant of compensation for high prices, in the United Provinces (R1.37 lakhs) owing to additional expenditure on diet and clothing, and in Burma (R1.07 lakhs) and Bihar and Orissa (R88,000) on account of larger grants to hospitals. The excess will be partly counterbalanced by minor savings in the other provinces.

Revised, 1918-19.

113. The Budget estimate for 1919-20 is taken at R37.24 lakhs more than the Revised for the current year. The increase is distributed over all the provinces. Provision has been made for the return of officers from military duty and for normal charges generally; for increased expenditure in connection with the transfer of district headquarter hospitals to Government management (R5.60 lakhs) and grants to local bodies for medical buildings in Madras (R3 lakhs); for a special expenditure of R9.38 lakhs from the surplus excise revenue and for the establishment of a school of tropical medicine in connection with the King Edward Memorial Hospital in Bombay (R1 lakh); for increased emoluments for officers of the Indian Medical Service in Bengal (R1.50 lakhs); for the revision of pay of sub-assistant surgeons in the United Provinces (R1.13 lakhs); for the improvement of hospitals in the Central Provinces (R2 lakhs); and for the transfer of the medical school from Lahore to Amritsar (R1.34 lakhs), acquisition of land for, and construction of a maternity block at, the Punjab medical school for women, Ludhiana (R1.40 lakhs), and various minor measures in the Punjab including the establishment of canal and itinerating dispensaries.

REVENUE.

114. The figures show little variation.

(b) Provincial.

115. The increase of R1.17 lakhs in the Revised for the current year over the Budget arises from larger receipts from college fees and paying patients in several provinces and from the refund of contributions made to district boards in previous years in Madras. The Budget estimate for 1919-20 closely follows the Revised for the current year.

EXPENDITURE.

(a) Imperial India and England).

116. The Revised estimate for 1918-19 is less than the Budget by R7·20 lakhs. The decrease is nominal, being due to the allotment of R1·50 lakhs for the Dhar housing scheme in Simla, the expenditure on which will be recorded under "Civil Works," and to the assignment to Provincial Governments of R6 lakhs, out of the reserve of R8·08 lakhs for sanitary expenditure provision for which was included in the Imperial section in the Budget estimate. Revised, 1918-19.

117. The reserve of R8·08 lakhs provided in the Budget for 1918-19 out of the recurring appropriation of R51 lakhs from Imperial revenues for the improvement of sanitation will be utilised as shown below :—

		[Lakhs of rupees.]
(i) Assigned to Provincial Governments for non-recurring outlay as follows :—
(a) to the United Provinces for the improvement of the pilgrim route to Badrinath and Kedarnath	1·00
(b) for the improvement of pilgrim centres in Madras (1·50) and Bombay, the United Provinces and Bihar and Orissa (1·00 each)	4·50
(c) to Madras for anti-malarial work	·50
(ii) Allotted to minor administrations for non-recurring sanitary outlay	·54
(iii) Transferred to "45.—Civil Works—Imperial" for the Dhar housing scheme, Simla	1·50
(iv) Unallotted balance which will be utilised before the close of the year	·04
TOTAL	8·08

118. The Budget estimate for 1919-20 exceeds the Revised for the current year by R14·34 lakhs. Provision has been made for the cost of sanctioned establishments and for increased grants to local bodies for sanitary purposes in Delhi and the North-West Frontier Province; for a contribution of R5 lakhs to form the nucleus of a new Public Health Fund; and for a reserve of R8·17 lakhs. Budget, 1919-20.

119. Out of the special appropriation of R51 lakhs referred to in paragraph 117, R37·83 lakhs have been assigned permanently to Provincial Governments or allotted for outlay in minor administrations. From the balance of R13·17 lakhs, R5 lakhs will be paid in 1919-20 to the Indian Research Fund; and R8·17 lakhs will be held in reserve to meet demands that may come forward during the ensuing year.

(b) Provincial.

120. The Revised estimate for 1918-19 is less than the Budget by R6·77 lakhs. The latter included special allotments aggregating about R43 lakhs for outlay from recurring and non-recurring grants made from Imperial revenues for the development of sanitation. The corresponding expenditure is now estimated at R47 lakhs inclusive of expenditure from the assignments made during the current year as stated in paragraph 117. Of this amount, R38 lakhs only are recorded under Sanitation, the balance being shown under Civil Works. It is therefore expected that the provision for expenditure from ordinary provincial resources will fall short of Budget anticipations by R1½ lakhs. An increased outlay in connection with epidemics during the year has been set off by savings under other items. Revised, 1918-19.

121. The Budget estimate for 1919-20 exceeds the Revised for the current year by R31·46 lakhs. The provision under Sanitation for expenditure from special Imperial grants amounts to about R54 lakhs against a probable expenditure of R38 lakhs in the current year. Provision has generally been made Budget, 1919-20.

for the full cost of sanctioned establishments as well as for a considerable expansion of outlay on sanitary schemes in several provinces, the Central Provinces being the only province which provides for a material decrease in the total expenditure. Provision has been made in Madras for a grant of Rs 5 lakhs to the City Corporation for water-supply and drainage schemes and in the Punjab for a grant of Rs 2 lakhs towards the Simla Improvement scheme; for special grants to local bodies for sanitary purposes in Bombay (Rs 3.37 lakhs), Madras (Rs 8 lakhs) and the United Provinces (Rs 5 lakhs); and for investigations into the hookworm disease and river pollution (Rs 1 lakh) and schemes of sanitary improvement and anti-malarial works (Rs 13.70 lakhs) in Bengal.

122. The following table shows the progress made by the Provincial Governments in utilising the various non-recurring grants made from Imperial revenues in recent years (beginning from 1911-12) in aid of Sanitation. To simplify the position, it has been assumed that the recurring grants are fully utilised before any expenditure is debited against the non-recurring grants; and the minus figure in 1917-18 against some of the provinces indicates that the recurring grants will not be spent in full during the year.

125. The Imperial outlay shown against "Other Provinces" consists of the charges of the Political Residency at Aden and certain other expenditure—mainly in connection with political refugees and state prisoners—in several provinces.

(a) Imperial—India and England.

126. The expenditure in 1918-19 is likely to exceed the Budget estimate by R1,21.36 lakhs. The latter included a provision of R1,12.50 lakhs for the moiety chargeable to Indian revenues of the cost of the South Persia Rifles, and the Indian share is now estimated at R1,60 lakhs. There will also be an excess of R15.05 lakhs under other political payments in Persia and on the frontiers arising from the war. On the other hand, the charges on diplomatic and consular services in Persia will be less by R2.61 lakhs than anticipated in the Budget, and there will be a further decrease due to the transfer to the Army head of certain charges for which Budget provision was included under this head; but these savings will be absorbed by excesses under other items.

127. The total Budget for 1919-20 is less than the Revised for the current year by R2,47.65 lakhs. A very substantial decrease is thus anticipated in the political expenditure necessitated by war conditions. The Indian share of the cost of the South Persia Rifles during the next year is estimated at R37.50 lakhs, and of special political expenditure in Persia at R37 lakhs.

(b) Provincial.

128. The saving of R3.43 lakhs in the Revised estimate for the current year as compared with the Budget occurs in the special expenditure in connection with the administration and proper control of the North-East Frontier, mainly in Burma. The Budget estimate for 1919-20 is R2.44 lakhs more than the Revised for the current year. Normal provision has been made in Burma for the above item of expenditure, but there is a nominal decrease in Assam owing to the inclusion under Police in the Budget for the next year of provision for part of the expenditure shown under this head in the Revised estimate for 1918-19.

EXPENDITURE.

129. The Revised estimate for 1918-19 is about the same as the Budget. Revised, 1918-19
 A lapse in the North-West Frontier Province in the provision for outlay from the wheat profits and in the grant for the creation of a separate Civil Veterinary Department will be set off by an excess in the charges of the Imperial Bacteriologist. The Budget for 1919-20 is more than the Revised for the current year by R1.42 lakhs. The grants which have lapsed in the North-West Frontier Province in the current year have been repeated for the next year, and provision has been made for a sugar bureau and for increased expenditure in other directions under the control of the Agricultural Adviser to the Government of India. Budget, 1919-20.

(b) Provincial.

130. The total Revised estimate for 1918-19 is less than the Budget by R2.65 lakhs. There will be lapses of R2.31 lakhs in the United Provinces and the Punjab from the allotments made from wheat profits, and a transfer to the Public Works head in the Central Provinces will account for a further decrease of R54,000. On the other hand, the Budget grant will be exceeded in Bengal (R1.14 lakhs) owing to expenditure on the distribution of improved paddy and jute seeds and from the Imperial grant made for agricultural education in the current year. The Budget estimate for 1919-20 exceeds the Revised for the current year by R27.49 lakhs. Increased allotments have been made in all the provinces for the expansion of the operations of the agricultural and allied departments. The Budget includes R4.49 lakhs for expenditure in the Punjab from the unspent balance of the wheat profits and R2.56 lakhs for the Bara reclamation experiment in the Lower Bari Doab Colony; and R9.16 lakhs for outlay on agricultural education, mainly in the United Provinces, Bombay and the Punjab, from Imperial grants made in the current year. Revised, 1918-19
Budget, 1919-20.

REVENUE.

(a) Imperial.

131. The shortage of R55,000 in the Revised for the current year as compared with the Budget occurs mainly in the receipts of the Veterinary Department. The Budget for 1919-20 does not differ materially from the Revised for the current year. Revised, 1918-19

(b) Provincial.

132. The Revised estimate for the current year is less than the Budget by R41,000. Decreases in Assam due to the postponement of the opening of a sugarcane farm and in the Punjab in the sale-proceeds of seeds are partly set off by minor increases in other provinces. The Budget for 1919-20 exceeds the Revised for the current year by R4.34 lakhs due to increased receipts from the sale of seeds in the Punjab, the departmental sale of manure in Madras and the opening of a sugarcane farm in Assam. Revised, 1918-19

133. The figures of expenditure shown against "Other Provinces" in the table on the preceding page represent outlay incurred in the several provinces in connection with ethnographical survey and census operations, as well as the cost of the Archaeological Department in Burma.

EXPENDITURE.(a) Imperial—India and England.

134. The total expenditure in 1918-19 will exceed the Budget by Rs. 1.63 lakhs. The increase is due to the charges of the Directors of Civil Supplies in minor administrations, the Foodstuffs Commissioner and the Controller of Cotton Cloth for India (Rs. 1.04 lakhs), higher expenditure on the Survey of India (Rs. 1.39 lakhs) owing to a large purchase of tools and materials for the Mathematical Instrument Office, and minor increases under other items, partly set off by a smaller outlay on stores in England (Rs. 1.95 lakhs). The decrease of Rs. 2.08 lakhs in the Budget for 1919-20, as compared with the Revised for the current year, results from a smaller provision for the purchase of stores in England and a decrease in that for the charges of the Survey of India; the former is nominal and arises from the transfer to Medical of part of the cost of stores included under this head in the Revised estimate for 1918-19. The Budget includes a grant of Rs 2.34 lakhs for the Directors of Civil Supplies in minor administrations, the Foodstuffs Commissioner and the Controller of Cotton Cloth.

Revised, 1918-19. 135. The total Revised estimate for 1918-19 will exceed the Budget grant by Rs 4.83 lakhs. The increase is distributed over all provinces except Madras and Assam, and is due to the charges of the Directors of Civil Supplies in the several provinces (Rs 3.72 lakhs), and a larger payment for the purchase of Java quinine to replenish stocks in Bengal (Rs 3.35 lakhs), partly counterbalanced by a smaller expenditure on the purchase of cinchona bark in Madras and minor savings under other items in several provinces.

Budget, 1919-20. The Budget estimate for 1919-20 is taken at Rs 1.10 lakhs more than the Revised for the current year. Allowing for a reduced provision for the purchase of Java quinine in Bengal, the Budget provides for an increased expenditure of over Rs 16 lakhs. Provision has been made for the charges of the Directors of Civil Supplies in some provinces, and for a larger outlay on soap making experiments in Madras (Rs 2.50 lakhs) and on the development of industries generally in several provinces. The aggregate provision for the latter object during the next year amounts to Rs 26½ lakhs against an anticipated expenditure of Rs 13½ lakhs in the current year.

REVENUE.

(a) Imperial.

Revised, 1918-19. 136. The Revised estimate for the current year includes some special receipts in the Survey of India. The Budget for 1919-20 provides for normal receipts.

Budget, 1919-20.

Revised, 1918-19. 137. The increase of Rs 45,000 in the Revised estimate for the current year as compared with the Budget is due mainly to the sale-proceeds of the pencil factory in Madras. The Budget for 1919-20 is Rs 6.30 lakhs less than the Revised for the current year. A decline in Bengal (Rs 7.98 lakhs) due to a fall in the demand for sulphate of quinine from the Military Department will be partly counterbalanced by increased receipts in Madras from the Government soap factory.

138. The variations in the estimates of payments in India are unimportant. The receipt in England in the Revised estimate for the current year arises from adjustments consequent on the death of a political pensioner who was drawing his pension in England. The reduced provision for payments in 1919-20 is due to the same cause.

Revised, 1918-19.

Budget, 1919-20.

140. The Revised estimate for 1918-19 is less than the Budget by £49,500 owing to the number of officers on leave out of India being less than anticipated. The Budget estimate for 1919-20 provides for an increase in payments as owing to the termination of hostilities a larger number of officers will be absent on leave out of India during the next year.

141. The figures of Imperial revenue shown against "Other Provinces" represent the receipts of certain abolished funds, the assets and liabilities of which were taken over by the Government, as well as the subscriptions paid by members of the Indian Civil Service for securing certain pensionary benefits for their families. The charges on account of such pensions as well as of the pensions of the abolished funds are recorded in the accounts as Imperial expenditure.

	R1.74 lakhs, a decrease in England in the pensions of retired officers of the increase mainly in ordinary payments in India. The Budget estimate for Budget, a rise in payments in Burma, Bombay, Madras and Bihar and Orissa,— off by lapses in other provinces. The Budget estimate for 1919-20 provides for the normal growth of the retired list.

REVENUE.

(a) Imperial.

144. The variations are unimportant. The Revised estimate for the current year and the Budget for the next year include special receipts of R96,000 and R32,000 on account of capitalised value, recoverable from the revenues of the occupied territories in Mesopotamia, in respect of pensions granted to the families of officers who were lent from India and have died in consequence of service in Mesopotamia. The increase in the Revised estimate is more than set off by the lower rate of subscriptions towards the Indian Civil Service family pensions in consequence of the rise in the exchange value of the rupee.

(b) Provincial.

145. The only variation of importance occurs in Madras where the Revised estimate for the current year includes a special receipt of R75,000 on account of contributions from local bodies on behalf of civil assistant surgeons in their employ.

EXPENDITURE.

(a) Imperial—India and England.

Revised, 1918-19. 146. The total Imperial expenditure in 1918-19, exclusive of the charges of the commercial departments, is likely to exceed the Budget provision by Rs20·42 lakhs. The rise is due mainly to a larger purchase of stationery to meet an increased demand and higher prices and an excess in the outlay on the Government presses following on additional printing work. Part of the excess arises also from the postponement to the current year of payments which were expected to be made in 1917-18 for stores purchased in England.

Budget, 1919-20. The Budget estimate for 1919-20 provides for a reduction of the expenditure on stationery.

(b) Provincial.

Revised, 1918-19. 147. The Revised estimate for 1918-19 does not differ materially from the Budget, an increase of about Rs3 lakhs in the cost of stationery supplied from central stores being counterbalanced by a saving in other expenditure, mainly the cost of Government presses. The Budget estimate for 1919-20 provides for sanctioned establishments and for about the same outlay on stationery as in the current year.

Budget, 1919-20.

REVENUE.

148. The Imperial revenue shown against "Other Provinces" represents recovery of the value of stationery supplied to railways and to municipalities and other local bodies. The Revised estimate of Imperial revenue for 1918-19 includes a special receipt for supplies of stationery to the Indian Munitions Board. The figures do not otherwise show any important variation.

149. This head normally records the comparatively small sums which have to be brought to account owing to the fact that the remittances from India to England by means of Council bills and transfers, and the remittances in the opposite direction by sterling bills and transfers, are not effected exactly at the rate of 16 pence to the rupee. It may be mentioned that any gain derived from remittances on account of the Gold Standard Reserve is credited to the Reserve and not to general revenues.

150. The exchange value of the rupee rose to 1s. 5d. in the middle of 1917-18 and further to 1s. 6d. in the middle of April 1918, council drafts being sold by the Secretary of State from the 11th April 1918 at 1s. 6d. per rupee in the case of immediate telegraphic transfers and 1s. 5½d. in the case of deferred transfers and bills. As stated in paragraph 7 above, His Majesty's Government agreed in March 1918 to repayment at 1s. 5d. per rupee of rupee disbursements incurred on their behalf in India in so far as they related to quasi-commercial supplies. In consequence of the further rise in exchange in April 1918, the agreement of the British treasury was subsequently obtained to the application of the 1s. 6d. rate from the 1st July 1918 to recoveries of disbursements in respect of quasi-commercial supplies, and from 1st October 1918 to recoveries of all disbursements in India on behalf of His Majesty's Government including payments to personnel. The current rates of exchange are also applied to recoveries in respect of funds supplied in India on behalf of Colonial Governments, to postal and money order transactions with countries having a sterling exchange and some other miscellaneous remittances between India and England. The profit derived from these causes will be set off to some extent by the actual loss sustained on the coinage of rupees by reason of high silver prices and by the loss on sales of reverse drafts on London since November 1918 at the rate of 1s. 5¾d. per rupee in the case of immediate transfers and 1s. 6½d. in the case of deferreds.

It may be explained that the gain or loss exhibited in the Government of India accounts in respect of the above transactions is exhibited in this way merely because of the fact that these accounts are framed on the basis of a 1s. 4d. rupee. The real effect of higher rates of exchange on the Government of India's position is that it enables them to discharge their sterling liabilities with a smaller number of rupees; this would be apparent if the accounts were prepared on a rupee basis, the sterling transactions being converted into rupees at the average rate at which remittances were effected throughout the year.

151. The following statement shows the details of the net receipts from exchange anticipated in the current and next years:—

		(In lakhs of rupees.)
		Revised, 1918-19.	Budget, 1919-20.
(i) Gain on sales of Council Bills		2,77	85
(ii) Gain on recoveries from His Majesty's Government of disbursements in India on their behalf		9,60	6,72
(iii) Gain in respect of postal and money order transactions		73	42
(iv) Gain on other remittance transactions		61	17
	TOTAL	13,71	8,16
(v) Deduct—loss on coinage		—6,16	—6,56
(vi) „ —loss on sales of sterling drafts		—95	...
	Net gain	6,60	1,60

The reduction in the gain on exchange in the Budget estimates for 1919-20 in the case of items (i) to (iv) follows on the lower estimates adopted for the remittances from which the profit is derived. Thus the war disbursements in India on behalf of His Majesty's Government are expected to amount in the ensuing year to £35·8 millions only against £72·7 millions in the current year. The Budget estimate in the case of Council Bills represents the gain on the estimated drawings of the year, viz., £12½ millions, after allowing for the effect of the guarantee which was given to the six British Exchange Banks, in connection with their undertaking to provide preferential finance for exports of national importance, to sell them Councils at certain favourable rates within one year after the war in order to enable them to bring back funds to India to the extent to which they were compelled to overbuy in that connection.

152. Charges in connection with the remittance of Government treasure are Imperial in all provinces; so is the discount paid, or the premium levied, in connection with the sale of bills at treasuries and currency offices to facilitate trade remittances of funds. Extraordinary items of revenue realised, or of expenditure incurred, under this head in the various provinces are also treated as Imperial, if they exceed Rs10,000 in amount. The proceeds of the freight tax on goods traffic by railways and inland steam vessels imposed in March 1917 are shown under Miscellaneous as Imperial receipts.

EXPENDITURE.

Revised, 1918-19.

153. The Revised estimate for 1918-19 exceeds the Budget by Rs16.42 lakhs. The payment to the Mysore Durbar in respect of surplus revenues of the Bangalore Assigned Tract is expected to be more than the Budget by Rs4.61 lakhs. An expenditure of Rs6.64 lakhs will be incurred on special commissions of enquiry, viz., the Industrial Commission, the Calcutta University Commission, the Sedition Committee, and the Reforms Committees against a Budget provision of Rs1.61 lakhs. Charges for the remittance of treasure will show a rise of Rs3.13 lakhs owing to the low level at which the Government's reserve of rupees stood throughout the year, and the increased movements of coin thereby necessitated. Miscellaneous items of expenditure connected indirectly with the war will cause an excess of Rs1.45 lakhs over the Budget, while an outlay of Rs2 lakhs will be entailed in connection with the war boards constituted after the Delhi Conference of April 1918. On the other hand, the bulk of the reserve provision of Rs1.17 lakhs for grain compensation allowance and unforeseen charges in Baluchistan and Delhi, which was provided in the Budget under Miscellaneous, has been appropriated to meet sanctioned outlay under other heads of account.

Budget, 1919-20.

154. The Budget estimate for 1919-20 provides for some reduction in the charges for remittance of treasure; for miscellaneous expenditure resulting from the war likely to be incurred in the ensuing year, mainly for the maintenance of aliens and refugees; for a small outlay on the commissions of enquiry mentioned in the preceding paragraph and Rs10,000 for a committee or industrial banking; and for normal expenditure on other items. A reserve provision of Rs50,000 has been entered in Delhi for unforeseen requirements, and one of Rs71,000 in Baluchistan for grain compensation allowance.

(b) India—Provincial.

Revised, 1918-19.

155. The Revised estimate for 1918-19 is less than the Budget by Rs17.77 lakhs. The decrease is mainly due to the record under other heads of account of most of the expenditure incurred against the lump grants for grain compensation allowance, and against the various other reserves which were included in the Budget estimates of several provinces under Miscellaneous. On the other hand, the constitution of war boards in the various provinces has entailed an extra expenditure of Rs10 lakhs, and there have been special charges in Bengal for the write-off of loans (Rs3.55 lakhs) and in the Punjab (Rs2 lakhs) on account of a grant to the Imperial Relief Fund for cheap grain shops and in connection with the celebration of the cessation of hostilities.

Budget, 1919-20.

156. The Budget estimate for 1919-20 provides generally for normal charges and for the usual reserves for unforeseen expenditure in most provinces. In Bengal, the Central Provinces and the United Provinces, lump allotments have again been made for grain compensation charges, and in the last province also for other indirect famine expenditure (Rs14 lakhs) and for expenditure that may fall on provincial revenues in connection with the sale of standard cloth (Rs5 lakhs). Special allotments of Rs1.40 lakhs and Rs1.20 lakhs respectively have been made in the same province for raising the pay of menials and the continuance of the war journal, Rs1 lakh in the Punjab for a grant for cheap grain shops, Rs3 lakhs in Bihar and Orissa for special allowances to low paid Government servants other than menials, and Rs5.50 lakhs in the Central Provinces for a special war allowance.

(c) England.

157. The increase in the Revised estimate of the current year as compared with the Budget represents mainly the value of stores lost on the voyage between England and India. The Budget estimate for 1919-20 provides for normal expenditure.

Revised, 1918-1Budget, 1919-20

REVENUE.

(a) India—Imperial.

158. The Revised estimate for 1918-19 exceeds the Budget by R24·21 lakhs. The proceeds of the freight tax will be higher by R7·19 lakhs, and there will be a special receipt of R11·87 lakhs from requisitioned liners employed as Government cargo ships. Increases are also anticipated in the proceeds from the sale of town sites in the Punjab, and in the receipts from the sales of bills owing to an increased demand for remittances of funds. The Budget estimate for 1919-20 excludes the special receipts in connection with cargo ships in the current year, but provides for a growth of R5·12 lakhs in the proceeds of the freight-tax and for a larger credit from percentage on Europe stores imported for provincial and local funds.

Revised, 1918-1Budget, 1919-20(b) India—Provincial.

159. The total revenue in 1918-19 is likely to exceed the Budget estimate by R5·94 lakhs. There has been a special receipt of R3 lakhs in Bengal from the sale of a police hospital; the balance of the increase occurs in the credits to revenue on account of unclaimed deposits in Bombay and in the receipts from the copying agency scheme in the Punjab. The Budget estimate for 1919-20 provides generally for normal receipts.

Revised, 1918-1Budget, 1919-20(c) England.

160. The Revised estimate for 1918-19 does not differ materially from the Budget. The increase in the Budget estimate for 1919-20 as compared with the Revised for the current year is due mainly to a recovery of £50,000 anticipated in respect of stores lost in 1917.

161. Owing to the failure of the monsoon, outlay on measures for famine relief is anticipated to the extent of R1,01·64 lakhs in the current year and R2,15·36 lakhs in 1919-20. The following table shows the distribution of the estimated expenditure by provinces :—

	(In lakhs of rupees.)
	Revised, 1918-19.	Budget, 1919-20.
Madras	·75	2·00
Bombay	70·00	60·00
Bengal	2·00
United Provinces	20·00	89·90
Punjab	3 00	4·00
Bihar and Orissa	1·00	16·00
Central Provinces	3·50	39·80
Minor Administrations	8·39	2·16
Total	1,01·64	2,15·36

One-quarter of the outlay in the major provinces will fall on Provincial Governments, the balance being borne by Imperial revenues. The expenditure in the Punjab relates to concessions granted for the carriage of fodder.

Revised, 1918-19.

162. The amount available for famine insurance in 1918-19 accordingly amounts to R48·36 lakhs, of which R48·05 lakhs will be spent on protective works and R31,000 will be appropriated for the reduction or avoidance of debt.

Budget, 1919-20.

163. The outlay on famine relief in 1919-20 will, as stated above, amount to R2,15·36 lakhs and a grant of R53 lakhs is required for the construction of protective works. There will thus be an excess of R1,18·36 lakhs over the normal grant of R1,50 lakhs for famine relief and insurance, and no allotment can be made for the reduction or avoidance of debt.

Construction of Protective Railways.

164. The small minus figure entered in the Revised estimate for 1918-19 represents the excess in the sale-proceeds of surplus stores of the Dharmapuri-Hosur extension of the Morappur-Dharmapuri Railway over the outlay during the year.

Construction of Protective Irrigation Works.

165. In the Budget estimate for 1918-19 an allotment of R61 lakhs was made for outlay on Protective Irrigation works, the whole amount being met from the Famine Insurance grant. The probable expenditure according to the Revised estimate will amount to R48.10 lakhs owing mainly to slower progress of work on the Nira Right Bank canal and the Pravara river project in Bombay, the Tandula canal in the Central Provinces, the Tribeni canal in Bihar and Orissa and certain tank projects in the Central and United Provinces. The entire outlay will be recorded in the Famine Relief and Insurance section of the accounts. Revised, 1918-11

166. In the Budget estimate for 1919-20, the allotment for Protective Irrigation works is taken at R53 lakhs, the whole amount being met from the Famine Insurance grant. The distribution of the grant of R53 lakhs is given in the table below. Budget, 1919-20.

168. The Budget estimate of Gross Receipts for 1918-19 was taken at Revised, 1918-19. Gross Receipts. ~~R70.50~~ crores, or ~~R2.25~~ crores more than the probable receipts of the previous year as then estimated. It was based on the assumption that the favourable conditions of traffic which contributed so largely to the earnings of the year 1917-18 would be fully maintained and that the enhancements of fares and freights introduced for the most part during 1917 would in 1918-19 add to the receipts of the whole year. Allowance was also made for additional earnings from new lines and extensions of recent construction. The result has proved much more favourable than was anticipated and the Revised estimate is now placed at ~~R76.55~~ crores, or ~~R6.05~~ crores higher than the budget. This substantial improvement occurs on almost all the principal railways and is attributable mainly to larger receipts from the carriage of troops and military stores, and to increase in the ordinary passenger and general merchandise traffic. The figures in the Revised estimate of gross receipts as shown in the table on the preceding page include a repayment to the Secretary of State in England by the Mysore Durbar of ~~R3~~ lakhs on account of interest on the Debenture loan of 1886 relating to the Mysore State Railway.

169. The Revised estimate of Working Expenses for 1918-19 stands at Working Expenses. ~~R2.25~~ crores more than the Budget estimate. The excess is attributable mainly to payment to the subordinate staff of railways of temporary increases of pay, to the enhanced scales of pay of officers and subordinates which have been sanctioned generally on railways and to the large increase in gross earnings and in the train mileage run.

170. The increase of ~~R30~~ lakhs in the provision for payment of surplus Surplus Profits. profits to companies follows on the improvement in their net earnings during this year and in the last quarter of the preceding year.

171. The Budget estimate of Gross Receipts for 1919-20 is taken at Budget, 1919-20. Gross Receipts. ~~R80~~ crores, or ~~R3.45~~ crores higher than the Revised estimate of the current year. It is anticipated that in spite of the diminution of military traffic and the effect of adverse agricultural prospects in several provinces, the steady growth of railway earnings will continue.

172. The grant for Working Expenses in 1919-20 is more than the Revised Working Expenses. for the current year by ~~R9.58~~ crores, the increase being due to the provision made for a very large programme of renewals of permanent way and of replacement and renewals of locomotives and rolling stock to make good the arrears which have accumulated as a result of restrictions on expenditure coupled with the difficulty of obtaining the necessary material during the war. Provision has also been made for additional working expenses arising from the larger traffic anticipated next year.

173. Under Surplus Profits paid to companies there is a decrease of Surplus Profits. ~~R6~~ lakhs due to the smaller net receipts anticipated next year.

Interest Charges, etc.

174. The excess under Interest on debt is explained in paragraph 69.

Other receipts.Revised, 1918-19.Budget, 1919-20.

175. The receipts shown under this head represent the Government share of the surplus profits of the Rohilkund and Kumaon, Southern Punjab, Amritsar-Patti and Hardwar-Dehra Railways, payable under the terms of their respective contracts, and dividends on certain shares of the Ahmedabad-Delkha Railway allotted to Government in repayment of expenditure incurred by it on behalf of the railway. The improvement of £10,300 on the Budget estimate of receipts in the current year and of £46,600 provided for in the Budget of 1919-20 are due mainly to increase in the Government share of the surplus profits of the Southern Punjab Railway Company.

Other charges.

176. These consist of cost of land required by certain Companies, the contracts with which provide for the free supply of land wanted for the purposes of the railways undertaken by them, and of miscellaneous items such as surveys and controlling establishments (including the Railway Board). A share of the cost of control is charged to the working expenses of each Railway Company and the recoveries thus made are adjusted by deduction from the miscellaneous expenditure. The figures are:—

Land.—A lapse of R1.40 lakhs is expected in the Imperial Budget grant for the current year. The principal allotments made in 1919-20 are for the Sara-Sirajganj Railway and for the payment of rebate to the Guzerat Railways.

Revised, 1918-19.Budget, 1919-20.

Miscellaneous Expenditure.—The Revised estimate for 1918-19 shows an increase of R5.51 lakhs and is chiefly due to outlay on certain large surveys undertaken during the year which were not foreseen at the time of the Budget estimate, e.g., Nushki Extension, Agra-Karachi and Maungdaw-Akyab Surveys. The Budget for 1919-20 is made up as follows:—

Allotment for surveys	13,34,000
Charges for Railway Board and other establishments	16,18,000
Less—Recoveries from Railway Companies on account of cost of supervision	16,47,000
TOTAL	13,00,000

177. Taking India as a whole, the net revenue derived from Major Irrigation works in 1918-19 will exceed the Budget forecast by £44,100 (R6·61 lakhs). There will be a rise of R6 lakhs in the Direct Receipts and of R2·38 lakhs in the share of Land Revenue. There will however be an excess of R1·77 lakhs in the expenditure, viz., an increase of R10·64 lakhs in the interest charges, partly counterbalanced by a reduction of R8·87 lakhs under Working Expenses. A further improvement of £84,400 (R12·65 lakhs) is expected in the net revenue in 1919-20. This allows for a rise of R17·41 lakhs in the gross revenue, made up of an increase of R14·16 lakhs in the Direct Receipts and of R3·25 lakhs in the share of Land Revenue. But a higher provision of R1·23 lakhs has been made for Working Expenses and there will also be a growth of R3·53 lakhs in the interest charges. The net result under Minor Irrigation works in 1918-19 is worse than the Budget estimate by £21,900 (R3·28 lakhs), the result of an increase of R3·89 lakhs in revenue and of R7·17 lakhs in expenditure. The estimate for next year provides for a fall of R96,000 in the receipts and for a rise of R7·66 lakhs in expenditure.

178. The figures for Land Revenue due to Irrigation have already been examined in paragraphs 12 and 13 along with those for Land Revenue proper. The details of the other heads are exhibited in the following tables.

DIRECT RECEIPTS.

(a) Imperial.

179. The Revised estimate for 1918-19 is more than the Budget by R3.62 lakhs. The increase is due to a larger demand for canal water in the United and Central Provinces owing to deficient rainfall and to the collection of water rate for irrigation from the Yeu canal in Burma which has been opened in the current year. The Budget estimate for 1919-20 provides for a development of irrigation from the Mahanadi and Tandula canals in the Central Provinces, but a reduction is anticipated in the irrigated area in the United Provinces owing to the low state of the rivers which feed the canals. These causes account for the decrease of R1.08 lakhs in the next year's Budget as compared with the Revised for 1918-19.

Revised, 1918-19

Budget, 1919-20.

(b) Divided and wholly Provincial.

180. The rise of R2.38 lakhs in the Revised estimate for the current year as compared with the Budget is due to a large increase in the area under irrigation in the United Provinces (R9.19 lakhs) during both the rabi and the kharif seasons, partly set off by a decrease in the revenue from the Sirhind, Western Jumna, Lower Jhelum and Upper Chenab canals in the Punjab (R7.48 lakhs) where excessive rainfall at the beginning of the last winter prevented early rabi sowings and reduced the demand for irrigation.

Revised, 1918-19.

181. The Budget estimate for 1919-20 is based generally on the demand for rabi irrigation in the current year and on normal requirements in connection with the next year's kharif. An increase of R18 lakhs is expected in the Punjab owing to the development of irrigation from the Triple canal project, but there will be a fall of R3.22 lakhs in the United Provinces owing to the low state of the rivers. An expansion of irrigation is also expected in Bihar and Orissa as the result of the deficient rainfall, but there will be a diminution in Bombay owing to insufficient supply of water.

Budget, 1919-20.

WORKING EXPENSES.

(a) Imperial.

182. The total expenditure in 1918-19 is likely to fall short of the Budget provision by R92,000. Increases will occur in the North West Frontier Province owing to expenditure on training and drainage works and diversion bunds on the Upper Swat River canal and in the Central Provinces on account of repairs to the Mahanadi canal, but they will be met from the reserve provision of R2.02 lakhs entered in the Budget and a saving in establishment charges in the United Provinces in consequence of the new method of distributing these charges.

Revised, 1918-19.

183. The Budget estimate for 1919-20 is R2.89 lakhs more than the Revised for the current year. Increased allotments have been made in Burma for the newly opened Yeu canal and in the Central Provinces in consequence of the increased irrigation anticipated for the next year. The Budget also includes a reserve provision of R2.33 lakhs for unforeseen requirements. There is on the other hand a reduction in the provision for establishment charges in the North-West Frontier and United Provinces.

Budget, 1919-20.

(b) Divided and wholly Provincial.

184. The Revised estimate for 1918-19 will be less than the Budget by R7.95 lakhs. The saving occurs partly under establishment charges in Madras, Bihar and Orissa and the United Provinces in consequence of the revised method of allocating these charges, and partly in the provision for works in the Punjab.

Revised, 1918-19

185. The Budget estimate for 1919-20 is R1.66 lakhs less than the Revised estimate for the current year. The decrease of R2.66 lakhs in Madras arises from the omission of the special expenditure incurred in 1918-19 for repairs to flood damages on certain canals. Elsewhere provision has been made with reference to present requirements.

Budget, 1919-20. owing mainly to diminished irrigation in the Punjab in consequence of deficient rainfall. The Budget estimate for 1919-20 does not differ materially from the Revised estimate for the current year.

Revised, 1918-19. 188. The total Revised estimate for 1918-19 exceeds the Budget by R4.51
Budget, 1919-20. lakhs. Important increases occur in Bengal (R2.40 lakhs) owing to the diversion of railway traffic to canals and in Burma (R1.50 lakhs) from the collection of arrears. The Budget for 1919-20 excludes the arrear collections in Burma and elsewhere follows the Revised estimate for the current year.

EXPENDITURE.

(a) Imperial—India and England.

Revised, 1918-19. 189. The increase of R2.97 lakhs in the Revised estimate for the current year as compared with the Budget is due to a special outlay in the North-West Frontier Province for the safeguarding of a road. A sum of R54,000 out of the reserve provision of R57,000 included in the Budget has been allotted to the Government of the United Provinces for tank restoration works and placed at its credit by an assignment of Imperial revenue (vide paragraph 232).

Budget, 1919-20. 190. The Budget estimate for 1919-20 is less than the current year's Revised by R95,000. Provision has been made for normal expenditure and a reserve of R60,000 has been entered to meet expenditure which cannot be foreseen at present.

(b) Divided and Provincial.

Revised, 1918-19. 191. The Revised estimate for 1918-19 exceeds the Budget by R4.20 lakhs. Increases are anticipated in Madras owing to larger repairs to flood banks and a rise in establishment charges under the new method of allocation; in Bengal due to larger outlay on the Madaripur Bheel route and anti-malarial works; in the Punjab on account of charges for the Thal survey for which provision was included in the Budget under Land Revenue; and in the Central Provinces owing to expenditure on works undertaken to provide employment in connection with the scarcity. But these excesses and a minor one in Bombay will be met in part from savings in other provinces.

Budget, 1919-20. 192. The Budget estimate for 1919-20 is taken at R8.60 lakhs more than the Revised for the current year. Provision has generally been made for sanctioned establishments, for necessary repairs and for a normal programme of works. The bulk of the increase occurs in Bengal (R6.72 lakhs) where allotments have been made for the Kidderpore bridge (R3½ lakhs), for larger outlay on the Madaripur Bheel route (R1.40 lakhs), for coaling plant for dredgers (R1 lakh) and for some other minor objects. The Budget also includes R2.90 lakhs for a reserve depôt for tools and plant in the United Provinces and R2 lakhs for improvements to waterways and R1.50 lakhs for river embankments in Burma.

194. The Imperial revenue and expenditure shown against "Other Provinces" represent the transactions in connection with the buildings of the various departments, e.g., salt, customs, etc., the receipts and charges of which are wholly Imperial.

EXPENDITURE.

(a) Imperial—India and England.

195. The Revised estimate for the current year does not differ materially from the Budget. An expenditure of about R7 lakhs over and above the Budget provision is expected to be incurred in connection with the provision of accommodation at Simla for junior officers and subordinate establishments of the Government of India, both European and Indian. A further increase of about R3·5 lakhs is due to the construction of a new Telegraph Office at Simla, and additional office accommodation at the Secretariat in temporary Delhi. Payments in England by the Secretary of State are also expected to be about R1 lakh more than the amount anticipated. These excesses will however be counterbalanced by savings in the provinces, inclusive of R4·50 lakhs in the North-West Frontier Province due to the transfer of certain roads to the Military Works Department. Revised, 1918-19.

196. In 1919-20 the total Imperial grant has been fixed at R1,00 lakhs, exclusive of R6·41 lakhs allotted for expenditure in the Civil Department, mostly in the several minor administrations, and of sums aggregating R42·10 lakhs to be spent by the administrations of the North-West Frontier Province (R32·85 lakhs) and Baluchistan (R9·25 lakhs). The total Budget for 1919-20 is more than the Budget and Revised estimates for 1918-19 by R18·27 lakhs and R18·40 lakhs respectively. The grants for ordinary expenditure have been kept as low as possible in view of the present financial situation. Budget, 1919-20.

Revised, 1918-19.

198. The Budget grants for 1919-20 proposed for the North-West Frontier Province and Baluchistan are higher than the Revised estimate for the current year by R13.98 and R2.06 lakhs respectively. Increased allotments have been necessary both for works and repairs as a result of the severe restriction of expenditure which has been enforced since the outbreak of the war.

(b) India—Provincial.

199. The total Revised estimate for 1918-19 is less than the Budget by R72.02 lakhs. The Budget provided for an outlay of R8 lakhs on Civil Works from the special Imperial assignments made in recent years for Education, Sanitation and other beneficent services, but the total expenditure of this class in the current year to be recorded under Civil Works is now estimated at about R23 lakhs. Eliminating this special expenditure as well as the Budget provision made for it, the Revised estimate under Civil Works falls short of the corresponding Budget grant by about R87 lakhs. All the provinces except Madras and Bengal contribute to the lapse which is largest in Bombay (R35.38 lakhs) and Bihar and Orissa (R20.65 lakhs). The saving is attributable generally to a curtailment of the programme of works in pursuance of the recommendations of the Delhi Conference of April 1918 regarding economy in the expenditure of Government. The non-utilisation of the Budget provision for grants for sanitary objects from surplus excise revenue and a large reduction in the programme of works account for the decrease in Bombay, while that in Bihar and Orissa arises from the postponement of outlay on the new capital, the University site, the Lunatic Asylum and other works, partly for want of materials. The excess in Madras is due to grants aggregating R20 lakhs made to local bodies for the improvement of roads affected by restrictions on railway traffic and in Bengal to outlay on the construction of police buildings, the Budget provision for which was included under Police.

Budget, 1919-20.

201. The Budget estimate for 1919-20 exceeds the Revised for the current year by R1,84.34 lakhs. The increase is distributed over all the provinces, but is largest in Burma (R53.02 lakhs) and Bombay (R48.01 lakhs). Allotments aggregating R21 lakhs have been made for outlay on civil works from the special Imperial assignments made in recent years.

202. The total provision for original works in 1919-20 has been taken at R1,45.69 lakhs more than the probable expenditure in the current year. Provision has been made for a considerable expansion of outlay on buildings and communications in Bombay and Burma; for progress of work in connection with the Bankipore buildings in Bihar and Orissa and the partition of the districts of Midnapore and Mymensingh in Bengal; for regrant of lapses in the current year, for acquisition of land for the new University and for an expanded programme of works in view of the present scarcity in the Central Provinces; and in Burma for a regrant of lapses and the construction of an agricultural college from the Imperial grant made in the current year for technical and agricultural education.

203. The total provision for grants to local boards and municipalities in 1919-20 is about R4 lakhs less than the similar expenditure in 1918-19 as the result of variations in all provinces. The decrease occurs mainly in Madras where the Budget provision for grants for roads affected by railway restrictions amounts during the next year to R6 lakhs against R20 lakhs in the Revised for the current year. Of the provision under grants to local bodies R1.50 lakhs represent the grant from Imperial revenues to the Calcutta Improvement Trust, and R3.25 lakhs for a contribution to the Chittagong port.

204. The Budget grants for repairs and establishment charges are generally based on normal requirements and sanctioned scales. Provision has been made in the United Provinces for a temporary staff to prepare projects for works held in abeyance during the war. The Budget under the head "Other items" includes a reserve provision of R5 lakhs in Burma.

REVENUE.

(a) Imperial.

205. The variations are unimportant.

(b) Provincial.

206. The Revised estimate for 1918-19 shows a rise of R2.14 lakhs over the Budget estimate, due to the refund of contributions paid to local bodies in previous years in Madras and to increase in the sale-proceeds of old materials and miscellaneous items of revenue in Bombay and Bengal, partly set off by the postponement to the next year of a contribution of R1.50 lakhs expected from the public towards the King Edward's College, Amraoti. Apart from this contribution, the Budget estimate for 1919-20 provides for normal receipts.

207. The receipts and expenditure under the 'Army' head are given in the preceding statement. Revised, 1918-19, compared with Budget, 1918-19.

208. The Revised Estimate for the current year and the Budget Estimate for 1919-20 include £12,700,000 and £8,695,000, respectively, on account of the Government of India's additional war contribution to the Imperial Government, represented by the following items:—

	Revised, 1918-19.	Budget, 1919-20.
	£	£
Normal cost charges of additional Indian troops	8,800,000	6,800,000
Increased emoluments of Indian troops	200,000	200,000
Cost of European Section, Indian Defence Force	200,000	200,000
War pensionary charges of Indian troops and their British officers	500,000	995,000
War pensionary charges of British troops	...	500,000
Expenditure on temporary lines for the accommodation of additional troops	3,000,000	...
	12,700,000	8,695,000

209. Excluding these special charges, the net Army expenditure, according to the Revised Estimate for 1918-19, exceeds the Budget by £1,163,000, made up of an increase of R154.78 lakhs (£1,031,900) in India and of £131,100 in England. As the India Army Budget for 1918-19 included a reserve of R296.53 lakhs (£1,976,900) the actual additional expenditure in India, for which no specific provision was made in the Budget, is (R154.78 lakhs plus R2,96.53 lakhs) R4,51.31 lakhs (£3,008,800), which is mainly due to the following:—

Thousands of rupees.

(1) Additional expenditure on account of North-West Frontier operations, mainly in connection with the Marri operations; the complete mobilization of two divisions and a cavalry brigade and troops and headquarters in the three Frontier brigades; the raising of additional animal and mechanical transport units; and higher Military Works expenditure on accommodation for additional troops for the defence of the North-West Frontier	1,05,00
(2) Increased pay (in the form of bonus) to British officers and troops	66,90
(3) Increased railway charges	1,16,50
(4) Increased food charges, mainly owing to rise in prices	60,00
(5) Cost of Home stores obtained for the Royal Air Force by direct demand on the War Office and adjustable in the Indian accounts	30,45
(6) Increased outlay on dairy farms (this is counterbalanced by increased receipts)	20,20
(7) Increased travelling allowances and contingent charges	16,50
(8) Larger outlay on hire of transport	15,24
(9) Expansion of the activities of the Indian Munitions Board	12,80
(10) Rise in prices of medical stores and increased demands	8,74
(11) Increased pay to Subalterns of the British Army (this includes arrear payments from 1st October 1917)	12,80
(12) Cost of acquiring land for a parade ground at Bannu, for aeroplane landing grounds, and for ordnance factories, etc.	6,29
(13) Hair-cutting and washing allowances to British troops, owing to abolition of clothing allowances and grant of free issues in kind	7,16
(14) Larger expenditure on petrol and mechanical transport units	5,51
	4,84,09

*Revised, 1918-19,
compared with
conold.*

Improvements in receipts reduce the net expenditure by R27·14 lakhs and the increase of pay to British troops sanctioned in 1917-18 is estimated to cost R21·75 lakhs less than the Budget provision.

With regard to (1), it may be mentioned that no provision had been made for the Marri operations, which commenced in March 1918 after the budget for 1918-19 had been settled. The mobilization of certain divisions and brigades on the Frontier was sanctioned in the course of the year in consequence of the then war situation and led to heavy additional expenditure in connection with animal transport. A small outlay will also be incurred on account of 10 Ford van companies, the formation of which was sanctioned as a temporary measure by the Secretary of State in July last, and some of which are expected to arrive in India before the end of the current financial year.

The bonus at (2) follows the scheme recently sanctioned at Home and provides for payments commencing from 1st February 1919 to officers and men of the British Army and British officers of the Indian Army forming the normal garrison in India, and to certain Royal Indian Marine personnel.

The increased railway charges at (3) are due to more railway movements, consequent upon the great expansion of recruitment. India bears the cost of all internal movements, other than those to ports of embarkation. The greater part of this additional expenditure comes back to Government in the shape of increased railway receipts.

The increase of R60 lakhs under food charges reflects the great increase which has taken place during the current year in prices of articles of food for men and animals.

With regard to (5), the cost of aeroplanes and aviation stores demanded from the War Office direct is being adjusted in India. There is also expenditure at Home, which is due to additional arrear claims having been preferred by the Imperial Government.

In connection with the increased travelling allowances and contingent charges at (7) above, it may be observed that, apart from the additional travelling necessitated by the increase of the army in India and consequent need for more constant inspection, and apart also from the higher expenditure on travelling allowances resulting from the formation of a number of classes for the intensive training of officers, non-commissioned officers and others, this increase is due to the fact that travelling allowances and contingent charges are borne by India in respect of the largely increased Army Headquarters staff and Divisional staffs.

The larger outlay on hired transport at (8) above is due to the constant internal movements of troops in India consequent upon redistributions due to units proceeding overseas, extra recruitment and the like.

The sum at (9) represents the share, debitable to India, of the increased establishments of the Indian Munitions Board. The Board has constantly been taking over new activities throughout the current year; and the ever increasing demands on India for munitions have also led to increases in the staff.

210. The increase of £131,100 at Home is made up of numerous items, the most important of which are an increase of £101,600 on Home stores, a payment of £90,100 to the War Office, representing minor savings due to the war in military expenditure in England, and a lower payment of £58,500 to the War Office in respect of effective charges of British forces serving in India.

*Budget, 1919-20,
Revised, 1918-19.*

211. Excluding the additional war contribution mentioned in para. 208 above, the net Budget of 1919-20 under the Army head exceeds the Revised estimate for 1918-19 by R3,03·09 lakhs (£2,020,600), of which R2,70·24 lakhs (£1,801,600) occur in India and £219,000 at Home.

212. The following are the more important causes of increase in India :—

	Thousands of rupees.
(1) Increase in pay (in the form of bonus) to British troops and to British officers of the Indian Army sanctioned with effect from 1st February 1919	8,08,10
(2) Provision for building up a reserve of mobilisation and war stores	1,50,00
(3) ' Reserve ' provision to meet unforeseen charges	1,30,70
(4) Increased provision for ' food supplies '	30,00
(5) Larger provision for increased pay to British troops, which was sanctioned in 1917-18	12,00
(6) Provision in Budget, 1919-20, for revision of the peace establishment of mountain batteries	11,26
(7) Provision for a new wireless signal company	5,94
(8) Grant to British soldiers of allowances for haircutting and washing on abolition of clothing allowances from 1st October 1918 and issue of clothing in kind	7,17
	6,55,17

Of the foregoing, the new items of expenditure are at (2), (6) and (7). A Committee is now sitting to examine the extent of a mobilization store reserve which must be maintained, and pending a final decision a provision of £1 million has been made as a first instalment on this account. The revision of the peace establishment of mountain batteries is a measure which is being submitted for the sanction of the Secretary of State; the formation of a new wireless signal company, for which provision has been made at (7) has been approved by the Secretary of State.

The increases above are partly counterbalanced by decreases, of which the following are the principal :—

	Thousands of rupees.
(9) Lower provision for expenditure debitable to the head " War--India " in view of the cessation of hostilities	2,71,42
(10) Omission of provision in the Budget 1919-20 for scheme for the extension of the Ordnance factories	37,50
(11) Smaller provision for maintenance of Ordnance equipment and other items taken into account in the ordinary war contribution	30,00
(12) Special expenditure on acquisition of land in 1918-19, not required next year	6,29
(13) Smaller provision for increase of pay to subalterns, as the Revised 1918-19 includes arrear charges	4,30
(14) Smaller provision for the Indian Munitions Board	4,09
(15) Reduced allotment for travelling and contingent charges	6,50
(16) Less provision for hire of transport	7,77
(17) Expected fall in railway charges	22,50
	3,90,37

The omission of provision for the scheme for the extension of the Ordnance factories is due to the fact that the Government of India's liability for this scheme is limited to £250,000, and the whole of this amount is being adjusted in the current year's accounts. The other reductions are due generally to the cessation of hostilities and gradual return to the normal scale of expenditure.

213. The increase of £219,000 at Home is mainly due to larger provision for stores (£187,700). Other variations are—an increase of £88,000 in furlough allowances, of £37,700 in Indian Troop Service charges, and of £39,500 in capitation payments to the War Office : on the other hand, there is a lower provision of £70,300 on account of minor savings due to the war payable to the War Office, and of £27,000 which was refunded in 1918-19 to the War Office in connection with Indian regiments serving in the Colonies.

*Budget, 1919-20,
compared with
Budget, 1918-19.*

214. As compared with the Budget of the current year, the Budget for 1919-20 (apart from the additional war contribution referred to in para. 208) shows an increase of £3,183,600 in net expenditure made up of £2,833,500 in India and £350,100 in England. These variations have been already explained in the preceding paragraphs dealing with the Revised for 1918-19 as compared with the Budget of that year and the Budget for 1919-20 as compared with the Revised for 1918-19.

*Revised, 1918-19,
compared with
Budget, 1918-19.*

215. The expenditure in India during 1918-19 is expected to be R9.09 lakhs over the Budget, owing mainly to larger expenditure on stores. But for a reduction of R9.60 lakhs owing to readjustment of war charges provisionally compiled as Marine expenditure in 1917-18, the increase would have been R18.69 lakhs over the Budget. Taking the small improvement of R72,000 in receipts into account, the net expenditure in India becomes R14.61 lakhs, or R8.37 lakhs more than the Budget figure of R6.24 lakhs.

The decrease of £11,300 at Home is due chiefly to the expenditure on the construction of certain vessels being now expected not to exceed £64,000 against £132,800 provided in the Budget. This decrease is partly counter-balanced by increased expenditure on miscellaneous stores (£52,700).

*Budget, 1919-20,
Revised, 1918-19.*

216. The provision for next year, India and Home combined, is R35.46 lakhs (£236,400) in excess of the anticipated net expenditure of £696,200 in 1918-19. The increase is due chiefly to larger provision of £123,200 for the completion of the two Royal Indian Marine vessels under construction and of £40,000 for a dredger which the War Office bought in 1917-18 in an unfinished condition and are now restoring duly completed to the Indian Government. An additional sum of £51,600 has also been provided for ordinary miscellaneous imported stores.

217. Expenditure—Ordinary Demands.—These show a considerable increase—about R1,13 lakhs (£754,000)—which is to a great extent due to urgent measures necessitated by the war and consists of a number of relatively minor items sanctioned by General Officers Commanding in exercise of the special powers given them for the period of the war. A large item relates to the provision of additional furniture for temporary barracks which, under present arrangements, is debited to Indian revenues. The excess is also partly caused by further expenditure on the Acetone factory at Nasik, amounting to R12.30 lakhs; the establishment of an engineer field park at Lahore, costing R22.02 lakhs; and the maintenance charges of certain roads on the North-West Frontier, for which a sum of R4½ lakhs was transferred from the Civil to the Military Works estimates.

Special Demands.—The expected increase is about R41 lakhs (£274,000) over the budget allotment of about R131½ lakhs. Improvements to frontier roads account for about R17 lakhs over the budget provision of R40 lakhs (apart from an expenditure of R10½ lakhs made available by reappropriation); R5 lakhs are being spent on improvements and extensions in the Rawalpindi arsenal; the provision of temporary accommodation for a machine gun company at Quetta will cost about R1.16 lakhs; the construction of a temporary bridge over the Haro river, about R1 lakh; the establishment of an ice factory at Bannu, about R $\frac{3}{4}$ lakh; the construction of new buildings in the Gun and Shell Factory at Ishapore, about R1.66 lakhs; and the reconstruction of Indian troops' lines accounts for a further increase of R4 lakhs over the budget provision (R15 lakhs).

Budget, 1918-19.*

Expenditure-Ordinary Demands.—For 1919-20, R146.60 lakhs (£977,400) have been allotted against R1.36 lakhs (£906,700) in the current year. The principal cause of the increase is due to provision of accommodation for mechanical transport companies and Royal Air Force, and heavier establishment and repair charges.

Special Demands.—The allotment for 1919-20 has been fixed at R126.55 lakhs (£843,600) as compared with about R131 $\frac{1}{4}$ lakhs (£874,800) in the current year. The most important measures provided for are :—

SCHEDULE.

219. In the Budget for 1918-19, a sum of R3,25.77 lakhs (£2,171,800) was included for schedule measures. The probable expenditure is now estimated at R3,76.19 lakhs (£2,507,900), or an increase of R50.42 lakhs (£336,100), of which about £8,500 will be in England and £327,600 in India.

The increase at Home is due to larger expenditure on rearmament of artillery and to the payment of arrear charges on account of Very's pistols and cartridges, and hand grenades, for which no budget provision was made; it is also due to larger payments on Military Works stores. These excess payments have to a large extent been counterbalanced by a lapse of £68,800 in the provision on account of the two marine vessels, on which it is anticipated that only £64,000 will be spent, against the budget provision of £132,800. The increase in India includes £30,000 for equipment required in connection with the introduction of the station hospital system in India for Indian troops, £17,000 for the acquisition of land at Bannu for a parade ground, and about £233,000 on military works, e. g., frontier roads, improvements and extensions in the Rawalpindi arsenal, the temporary bridge over the Haro river, etc.

220 The Schedule for 1919-20 has been fixed at ₹2,10·83 lakhs (£1,405,500). The important measures provided for are—Rearmament of artillery, £120,900; new wireless signal company, £51,400; revision of the peace establishment of mountain batteries armed with Q. F. 3·7 inch howitzer equipment, £26,800; alterations to the peace establishment of mountain artillery units armed with B. L. 2·75 inch equipment, £48,300; completion of the two marine vessels under construction in the Home dockyards and the taking over of the dredger "Cachalot" from the War Office, £227,200. The provision for military works amounts to £843,600, which includes £782,500 for works in progress and £61,100 for new works.

221. Apart from the additional war contribution for effective and non-effective charges amounting to £12·7 millions in 1918-19 and £8·695 millions in 1919-20, the expenditure in 1918-19 is expected to exceed the Budget provision (which included £1·977 millions as a reserve for unforeseen expenditure) by £2·226 millions, and the budgeted expenditure for 1919-20 is placed at £1·274 millions higher than the anticipated expenditure this year. The variations have been explained in the foregoing paragraphs. The increases may be ascribed generally to war conditions. But for the additional war contribution of £8·695 millions and the increased pay in the form of bonuses to British officers and troops, involving an extra £2·5 millions, and the allotment of a sum of £1 million towards the building up of a reserve of war mobilisation stores, the Budget provision for 1919-20 would have been practically the same as the current year's Budget grant, viz., £29 millions.

Revised, 1918-19. 222. The increase of Rs 2·80 lakhs in the Revised estimate of the current year as compared with the Budget is made up as follows :—

	(of rupees.)
(1) Increase in assignment to Bihar and Orissa for the upkeep of the European lunatic asylum at Ranchi (Rs 1·08 lakhs) and for the detention of seditious prisoners in Hazaribagh jail (Rs 34,000), counterbalanced by a decrease of Rs 92,000 in the assignment towards the cost of the Patna High Court. (The amounts of assignments vary in these cases with reference to the actual expenditure in each year).	+ 50
(2) Increase in the Punjab Government's share of sale-proceeds of sites for shops and residences in certain towns in that province (these receipts are credited in the Imperial section of the accounts, but the local Government is entitled to a moiety)	+ 2·37
(3) Reduction in assignment to Madras in connection with the remission of the village service cess in proprietary estates due to slower progress in the resumption of inam lands of village servants	— 65
(4) Minor adjustments of a recurring nature	+ 58
Total	+ 2·80

223. The Budget estimate for 1919-20 is less than the Revised for the Budget, 1919-20. current year by R1·34 lakhs. The decrease is due to the following causes :—

	Lakhs of rupees.
(1) Decrease in the Punjab Government's share of sale-proceeds of town sites	-2·52
(2) Increase in assignment to Madras in connection with the remission of the village service cess in proprietary estates, due to progress in the resumption of inam lands of village servants	+·50
(3) Petty adjustments of a recurring nature	+·68
Total	-1·34

(b) Recurring assignments from Provincial to Imperial in connection with the 1916-17 scheme of taxation.

224. The increases of (a) R15·74 lakhs in the Revised estimate over the Budget for the current year and (b) R31·11 lakhs in the Budget for 1919-20 over the Revised for 1918-19 relate to the revision of income-tax rates introduced in 1916. The head Income-tax is divided equally between Imperial and Provincial revenues, but as the taxation referred to was imposed for Imperial purposes, an assignment is taken from the provinces equivalent to the yield of the new taxation which is credited to the Provincial revenues under the ordinary division. The amounts of the assignments vary therefore with reference to the latest estimates of the proceeds of the taxation which are credited in the first instance as Provincial revenue. The increase in the assignments is distributed among the provinces as follows :—

(c) Special recurring grants for Education.

225. The increase of R75,000 in the Budget estimate for 1919-20 over the Revised for 1918-19 is nominal; the grants of R25,000 for a training college for male teachers of the domiciled community in Madras and of R50,000 to the Punjab for the Government training class at Sanawar, which were allotted as non-recurring grants in previous years out of the recurring appropriation of R30 lakhs for the improvement of the pay and training of teachers, will, with effect from 1919-20, be replaced by recurring assignments of R50,000 to Madras and R25,000 to the Punjab. Budget, 1919-20.

The amounts of assignments to be adjusted in the accounts for 1919-20 will be calculated with reference to the actual loss of income-tax revenue. The total of R69·35 lakhs shown in the Budget is distributed among the provinces as follows:—

CONSTRUCTION OF PRODUCTIVE IRRIGATION WORKS.

Revised, 1918-19.

238. The expenditure in 1918-19 is expected to fall short of the Budget by R31.39 lakhs. There will be a lapse of about R13 lakhs in the allotments for works in operation owing to the postponement of remodelling, training and drainage works on the Lower Jhelum and Lower Chenab canals in the Punjab and the Upper Swat and Kabul River canals in the North-West Frontier Province, delay in the completion of works on the other canals in the Punjab owing to labour and transport difficulties, and credits received for the sale of tools and plant to the Military Department in the same province; partly set off by an increase of outlay on the permanent head works of the Ganges canal in the United Provinces as the credits assumed in the Budget for the sale of tools and plant have not been realised in the current year in consequence of delay in the completion of the works. There will also be a saving of about R17 lakhs in the grant for works under construction, due to the curtailment of works on the Mahanadi and other canals in the Central Provinces, and slower progress on the Toludur project in Madras and the Ye-u canal in Burma. The reserve provision of R88,000 included in the Budget will lapse.

Budget, 1919-20.

239. The Budget grant for 1919-20 has been fixed at R65 lakhs or about R26½ lakhs more than the probable expenditure in 1918-19, after due consideration of the requirements of the various canals under construction most of which are nearing completion. The following table shows the distribution of expenditure in 1918-19 and the grant for 1919-20 :—

Name of Project.	Expenditure in

Reserve Provision	6,31,000
TOTAL R	38,61,000	65,00,000
Equivalent in Sterling £	257,400	433,300

Of the total grant of R65 lakhs, about R28 lakhs will be allotted to canals under construction; R31 lakhs are required for the completion and development of canals in operation, and the balance of R6 lakhs will be held in reserve to meet unforeseen requirements.

240. The figures mentioned above do not include expenditure on Protective Irrigation Works, whether financed from the Famine Insurance grant or from ordinary revenues outside that grant. Including this outlay, and also some small expenditure on works which were originally classed as productive but have since ceased to belong to that class, the total expected outlay on the construction of irrigation works in the three years ending 1919-20 is as follows:—

242. The expenditure in the current year will amount to R43 lakhs or R3 lakhs more than the Budget. The distribution of the expenditure now anticipated is as follows :—

	(In lakhs of R)
(1) Works Expenditure	40.18
(2) Establishment and miscellaneous charges	2.82
Total	43.00

Of the works expenditure about R3½ lakhs are being spent on preliminary work; R1½ lakhs on the purchase of tools and plant and other stores; about R7 lakhs on sanitation; about R23½ lakhs on work on the Government House and the Secretariat and the construction of certain residential and other buildings; and about R3 lakhs on the maintenance of works during construction.

Budget, 1919-20.

243. The provisional distribution of the Budget estimate of R45 lakhs in 1919-20 is given below—

	(In lakhs of R)
(1) Works expenditure	39.05
(2) Establishment and miscellaneous charges	5.95
Total	45.00

Of the grant of R39 lakhs for works outlay, R3 lakhs will be devoted to preliminary work and the further purchase of tools and plant and other stores. A sum of R8 lakhs will be spent on sanitation, R4 lakhs on the maintenance of works during construction, and R20 lakhs will be applied mainly to the construction of buildings on which work has already been commenced.

WAYS AND MEANS.

HOME TREASURY.

244. The bulk of the payments made in England on account of the Government of India consists normally of expenditure chargeable to the Indian revenues ; and if such payments represented the only transactions, the Ways and Means programme would be a simple arrangement, as the whole of the expenditure would ordinarily be met by remittance of funds from India. The capital outlay on the construction of railways and irrigation works, however, necessitates heavy borrowing, and a large portion of the money required has, when practicable, been raised in England, either direct or through the agency of Companies. A further complication is introduced by the practice under which all payments made in England to Railway Companies working purchased lines, for purchase of stores and other capital purposes, as well as all moneys raised by them, and paid into the Home treasury, are brought to account under the appropriate heads in this country, and are treated in the Home accounts and estimates as remittances to or from India, respectively. Operations connected with the Gold Standard and Paper Currency Reserves, and with the replacement of one particular form or item of direct or indirect debt by another, also largely swell the receipts and charges of the Home treasury without affecting ordinarily the general Ways and Means programme.

245. The items mentioned in the preceding paragraph constitute the bulk of the transactions of the Home treasury in normal years. The conditions created by the war have led to certain abnormal transactions which have affected the Ways and Means position to a continually increasing extent from 1915-16 onwards. Large sums are being received in England from the Imperial Government in repayment of expenditure incurred on their behalf in India. These indirect remittances from India have very largely increased the resources of the Home treasury and reduced the need for direct remittances by Councils to finance its requirements.

246. The following are the details of the transactions appearing in the Budget and Revised estimates of the Home treasury for 1918-19 and in the Budget estimate of 1919-20.

* The heads marked with an asterisk appear on both the receipt and payment sides. As the receipt and corresponding disbursement in each case are generally equal, they do not affect the Ways and Means of the year to any material extent.

(a) Of these amounts £6,000,000 represents funds of the Gold Standard Reserve.

(b) Of this amount £6,000,500 represents funds of the Gold Standard Reserve.

(c) Of these amounts £6,000,100 represents funds of the Gold Standard Reserve.

247. The table in paragraph 246 shows that there will be a net disbursement of £10,024,000 from the Home treasury in 1918-19, and that the receipts from Council Bills drawn against treasury balances in India will amount to £6,599,200. There will thus be a deficiency of £3,424,800 which will be met by a reduction of the cash balance of the Home treasury from £16,625,400 at the beginning of the year to £13,200,600 at its end. Revised, 1918-19.

248. The transactions of the Home treasury in the current year are inflated by the following large special items :—

- (i) There will be a net recovery of £86,355,300 from His Majesty's Government on account of disbursements connected with war requirements made on their behalf in India, and a sum of £3,360,300 will be recovered on the same account from the East African Protectorate.
- (ii) A sum of £33,415,000 will be paid to His Majesty's Government from the proceeds of the war loan raised in India in the current year, and payments amounting to £25 and 19 millions respectively will have to be made for silver obtained from America under the Pittman Act and purchases by the Secretary of State in the market.
- (iii) Sterling drafts issued in India involve a disbursement of £5,425,000, while the Secretary of State has had to invest a sum of £6,333,300 in British treasury bills on behalf of the Paper Currency Reserve in order to afford assistance to treasury balances in India.
- (iv) It will be necessary for the Secretary of State to withdraw £13,060,300 from the Special Reserve (vide paragraphs 34—35 of the Finance Member's speech introducing the Financial Statement for 1918-19) before the close of the current year in order to meet the disbursements mentioned above.

The foregoing items result in a net receipt of £13,602,600, and eliminating both from the Budget and Revised estimates for the current year the figures relating to the above special items, the net disbursements from the Home treasury in respect of transactions of a more normal character will stand at £23,626,600 in the Revised against £24,421,700 in the Budget. The improvement of £798,100 is the net result of the following variations from Budget anticipations :—

(i) Increased recovery in respect of money orders issued on India by other countries. (The issues of money orders on India continued on an abnormal scale during the greater part of the current year)	1,810,000
(ii) Increase in proceeds of British treasury bills deposited in London on account of subscriptions to the Indian war loan	634,300
(iii) Smaller discharge of railway debentures	1,093,000
(iv) Excess in net receipts from enemy ships employed under the control of the India Office	350,900
(v) Savings in total grants for capital expenditure on railways, irrigation works and Delhi (inclusive of the net outlay of the various railway companies)	394,500
Total increase in receipts or decrease in outgoings	4,282,700
(vi) Excess in net expenditure chargeable to revenue	314,400
(vii) Payments for Australian wheat purchased for India	1,215,000
(viii) Payment to Imperial Bank of Persia for funds supplied for military requirements in Persia and Mesopotamia	1,950,000
(ix) Deterioration under miscellaneous deposit and remittance transactions	5,200
Total decrease in receipts or increase in outgoings	8,484,600
Net improvement	798,100

249. The total drawings of Council bills on India in 1918-19 are expected to amount to £20,946,300. Of this sum, £6,599,200 will be utilised as stated in paragraph 247 above, to meet the disbursements of the Home treasury, while £14,347,100 will be appropriated to the Paper Currency Reserve for investment in British treasury bills.

The figures for the cash balance of the Home treasury mentioned in paragraph 247 above include in each case a sum of about £6 millions held on account of the Gold Standard Reserve; if this sum be excluded the balance at the end of 1918-19 is now estimated at about £7·2 millions against a Budget forecast of £11 millions.

250. The details of the transactions in respect of capital raised and deposited by Railway Companies are as follows:—

251. The Budget estimate provided for the discharge of £2,374,900 debentures of the Assam-Bengal, Bengal-Nagpur, Madras and Southern Mahratta and Rohilkund and Kumaon Railway Companies. Of these, debentures to the value of £1,531,900 have been discharged, and the remainder of the value of £843,000 will either be renewed or replaced by fresh capital.

252. The following are the details of the Railway remittance transactions. As already explained, they occur almost wholly in connection with the capital account of the purchased lines worked by companies:—

253. The Budget estimate contemplated the discharge of £250,000 debentures of the South Indian Railway Company maturing during the year; they have however now been renewed.

254. In accordance with the Budget programme £500,000 India bonds have been discharged in the current year. A sum of £42,315,000 is payable to His Majesty's Government on account of the proceeds of the second Indian war loan converted at the rate of 1s. 6d. per rupee; it is expected that £33,415,000 will be paid in the current year and provision for the payment of the balance has been included in the Budget estimates for 1919-20.

255. The Budget estimate for 1919-20 provides for a net disbursement of Budget, 1919-20 £14,531,500. It includes however the following special items:—

- (i) A recovery of £40,292,000 from His Majesty's Government on account of disbursements in India on their behalf and a similar recovery of £375,000 from the East African Protectorate.
- (ii) Payments of £12 millions for silver and £8,900,000 to His Majesty's Government being the balance due in respect of the proceeds of the second war loan floated in India.
- (iii) A provision of £18 millions for railway capital outlay.
- (iv) A receipt of £6,940,000 by withdrawal from the Special Reserve for financing the railway capital programme.

256. If we eliminate the figures relating to these special transactions from the current years' Revised and from next year's Budget, and in the case of the Revised also those relating to transfers through Currency and sterling transfers, we are left with a net disbursement for 1919-20 of £23,238,500 as compared with £21,502,600 now expected in 1918-19. The net increase of £1,735,900 in the disbursements for 1919-20 is the result of the following variations:—

(i) Repayment of assets of hostile firms held in deposit in India	2,350,000
(ii) Reduction in receipts in respect of money orders issued on India by other countries	1,810,000
(iii) Increase in net expenditure chargeable to revenue	773,700
(iv) Absence in 1919-20 of the special receipts in the current year in connection with the deposit of British treasury bills for subscriptions to the Indian war loan	718,300
(v) Deterioration in other items, mainly miscellaneous deposit and remittance transactions	65,800
Total increase in outgoings or decrease in receipts	5,717,800
(vi) Decrease in outgoings due to the omission of the provision for discharge of railway debentures and India bonds and for payment to the Imperial Bank of Persia included in the estimates for the current year	8,981,900
Net deterioration	1,735,900

257. Of the net disbursement of £14,531,500 referred to in paragraph 255 it is proposed to meet £12,250,000 by Council Bills and the balance of £2,281,500 by a reduction of the cash balances of the Home treasury, which are estimated to stand on the 31st March 1920 at £10,919,100 inclusive of £6,000,100 held on behalf of the Gold Standard Reserve.

258. The details working up to the increase of £7,637,200 in the net payments to Railway Companies shown in the table in paragraph 246 are given below :—

* Head (10) represents expenditure defrayed by reduction of Provincial balances.

† These include other Departments of His Majesty's Government than the War Office, the Commonwealth of Australia and the East African Protectorate.

‡ The figures shown under head (14) differ from those given in the Home Treasury Ways and Means statement, as Bills drawn by the Secretary of State towards the end of one year are paid in India in the next. The figures of the present statement represent payments in India.

§ This head records on one side the credits for silver received from America under the Pittman Act, and on the other payments therefor, whether from the cash balances of the Home treasury, by gold remittances or by rupee payments in India on behalf of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York.

264. In the Budget estimate for 1918-19, the cash balance in the Indian treasuries on the 1st April 1918 was taken at R24,78 lakhs. It was estimated that (1) the net Imperial revenue in India would amount to R34,60 lakhs, (2) there would be a net receipt of R1,82 lakhs under unfunded debt, (3) a sum of R88 lakhs would be available from the Famine Insurance grant for the avoidance of debt, (4) a net receipt of R10 lakhs would accrue in connection with Imperial and Provincial loans, (5) the remittance and capital transactions of railway companies would result in a net credit of R1,47 lakhs, (6) there would be a surplus of Provincial revenue over expenditure amounting to R20 lakhs, and (7) a sum of R4 crores would be recovered on account of rupee payments made in India in 1917-18 on behalf of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York.

1918-19. Main features of Budget estimates.

On the other hand, provision was made for: (1) a recoverable outlay of R1,02,00 lakhs in connection with the war on behalf of the War Office and a further outlay of R7,77 lakhs on behalf of other departments of His Majesty's Government and the East African Protectorate, (2) capital expenditure in India on railways (inclusive of outlay by companies) and canals to the extent of R4,63 lakhs, (3) an outlay of R38 lakhs on the construction of the new capital at Delhi, (4) the discharge of R56 lakhs of permanent, and R4,00 lakhs of temporary, debt, (5) a payment of R2,90 lakhs on account of Council bills drawn in 1917-18, and (6) a net disbursement of R1,09 lakhs on account of miscellaneous deposit and remittance transactions inclusive of capital contributed by Indian States for the construction of State Railways.

The total payments mentioned above aggregate R1,23,33 lakhs against a total receipt of R43,02 lakhs; the net disbursement of R80,31 lakhs was to be met to the extent of R30 crores from the proceeds of the war loan to be floated in India in 1918-19, R24,52 lakhs from remittances from the Secretary of State through the Paper Currency Reserve and R19,42 lakhs from silver shipped by him to India for coinage. The balance of R6,37 lakhs was to be found by a reduction of the Indian cash balance which would stand at the end of 1918-19 at R18,41 lakhs. The Budget estimates assumed that treasury bills of the value of R43½ crores which were issued in 1917-18 and were outstanding at the end of that year would be replaced by fresh bills in the current year.

265. The results, according to the Revised estimate, show considerable variations from this forecast. The year opened with a cash balance which was R1,79 lakhs less than Budget anticipations owing to heavier military disbursements in March 1918 than were assumed in the Revised estimate for 1917-18. These disbursements have risen considerably during the current year also, and there was a strong demand during the earlier part of the year for private remittances of funds to India by Council Bills. The drain by the payments of money orders issued by foreign countries on India has also been unusually large especially in the earlier months of the year, while during the later months the failure of the rains over wide parts of the country has necessitated the grant of takavi advances on a large scale. On the other hand, the receipts from the second war loan floated in the current year have far surpassed expectations, and remittances from the Secretary of State in the form of silver have been much larger than anticipated in the Budget as the result of the arrangements made with the United States of America for the sale to us of silver from their dollar reserve and of heavy purchases by the Secretary of State in the market. The sales of sterling draft in London in the latter part of the year have brought in an addition to the cash balances in India, and in spite of the unfavourable agricultural prospects, there has, outside military expenditure, been a substantial improvement in the revenue account, Imperial as well as Provincial. The cash resources in India proved however insufficient to meet the demands on them from about the time of closure of subscriptions to the loan and till we could obtain assistance to the extent required from shipments of silver. It became necessary in the interval to obtain Ways and Means advances aggregating R17 crores from the Presidency Banks; these advances have now been fully repaid. But it was necessary in December again to supplement our resources in India by taking power to increase the investments against our note circulation by R14 crores to a total of R100 crores. These further powers have been utilised to the extent of R12½ crores, about R6 crores being invested in Indian Treasury Bills and the balance in British Treasury Bills. With these additions to our resources we expect to be able, taking the year as a whole, after providing funds for military expenditure in full, and meeting direct remittances to the Home treasury to the extent of R12 crores, to discharge R6 crores out of the treasury bills issued to the public in 1917-18 and maturing in the current year, and to close the year with a balance of R18¾ crores.

266. The net disbursements on account of outlay recoverable from the Home Government (inclusive of sums disbursed on behalf of the East African Protectorate and the Commonwealth of Australia) are now estimated at R1,23,78 lakhs against the Budget forecast of R1,09,77 lakhs and Council bill payments from Treasury balances will total R12,16 lakhs against R2,90 lakhs only assumed in the Budget. There will also be a net issue of R19.11 crores for cost of military stores, equipment, etc., purchased in advance of requirements and charged to the war stores suspense account; and remittances from the Secretary of State through the Paper Currency Reserve will amount to R9,50 lakhs only against R24,52 lakhs assumed in the Budget. On the other hand, the proceeds from the war loan inclusive of cash certificates which were taken in the Budget at R30 crores will amount to R56,44 lakhs, and credits from silver remittances (inclusive of American silver) will total R57,48 lakhs against the Budget anticipation of R23,42 lakhs, after allowing for payments amounting to R16,45 lakhs made in India in the current year on behalf of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York and a remittance of gold to the value of R3,08 lakhs in part discharge of the price of the silver obtained from the American Government. There will also be a receipt of R8,14 lakhs from the sale of sterling drafts on London. Apart from these items, it is expected that the net transactions in India in the current year will be worse than Budget anticipations by R9,12 lakhs. This deterioration is the net result of the following variations :—

[In lakhs of rupees.]

(1) Deterioration in the combined revenue account of the Imperial and Provincial Governments, due mainly to increase in Military expenditure and loss in Land Revenue partly set off by improvements under Railways, Customs and Exchange	8,98
(2) Reduction in amount available from the Famine Insurance grant for the avoidance of debt owing to outlay on relief measures in several provinces	83
(3) Increase in capital expenditure on railways and irrigation works	56
(4) Larger net issues of Imperial and Provincial loans	2,08
Total decrease in receipts or increase in outgoings	12,45
(5) Improvement under Savings Bank Deposits (exclusive of a pro forma adjustment in connection with the transfer to Government of railway provident fund balances)	2,84
(6) Improvement under other transactions, mainly miscellaneous deposits and remittances	99
Total increase in receipts or decrease in outgoings	3,83
Net deterioration	9,12

267. The improvement under miscellaneous deposit and remittance transactions is the result of a number of variations among which may be mentioned (a) increased payments of foreign money orders, (b) a larger payment on account of cheques which remained outstanding at the end of 1917-18 owing to the closing days of March 1918 being holidays, and (c) a credit adjustment in respect of funds supplied by the Imperial Bank of Persia to military disbursing officers, the repayment to the Bank having been made by the Secretary of State in London.

268. The total receipts from the second Indian War Loan, subscriptions for which were received from the 3rd June 1918, amounted to R57,06 lakhs inclusive of R5,59 lakhs from the post office section of the loan and R85 lakhs tendered in London in the form of British Treasury bills. The total subscriptions were distributed among the different issues of the loan as follows:—

The gross receipts from cash certificates amounted to R3,20 lakhs. Certificates of the value of R3,82 lakhs are expected to be encashed during the current year, the net payment thus amounting to R62 lakhs.

269. In 1919-20 the net Imperial revenue is estimated at R33,36 lakhs; the remittance and capital transactions of railway companies are likely to result in a net credit of R11,23 lakhs; a net receipt of R4,70 lakhs is anticipated under unfunded debt; receipts of silver for coinage inclusive of American silver are expected to amount to R33,27 lakhs; a credit of R16,62 lakhs will be realised from the issue of stores charged to the suspense account for Indian requirements or those of the War Office; and miscellaneous deposit and remittance transactions will bring in a net receipt of R4,22 lakhs, owing mainly to (a) an anticipated reduction with the progress of demobilisation in the cash balances of military disbursing officers in the field and (b) recoveries in India of the value of Australian wheat paid for by the Secretary of State, partly set off by (c) payments of foreign money orders. On the other hand, provision has been made (1) for a recoverable outlay of R58,50 lakhs to be incurred on behalf of the War Office and of R2,93 lakhs on behalf of other authorities; (2) for payment of the annual instalment of R12 lakhs for the Gwalior loan of 1887 and the cancellation of R41 lakhs of paper of the 5 per cent war loan 1929-47 by purchases for the sinking fund; (3) for capital expenditure of R11,35 lakhs on railways and canals and of R34 lakhs on Imperial Delhi; (4) for discharge of treasury bills of the value of R22,50 lakhs, the value of the bills outstanding at the end of the next year being thus reduced to R21 crores; (5) for a draft of R2,88 lakhs from Provincial balances and a net issue of R1,22 lakhs under Imperial and Provincial loans; and (6) for a payment of R18,38 lakhs on account of the Secretary of State's drawings of Council Bills.

1919-20,
Main features of Budget estimates.

The net disbursements of the Government of India next year as shown in the statement in paragraph 263 above aggregate R15,23 lakhs. It is proposed to meet this deficiency by issuing a rupee loan the proceeds of which are estimated at R15 crores, and the cash balance in India on the 31st March 1920 will stand at the standard figure of R18½ crores.

1919-20.

270. The following table gives details of the transactions of Savings Banks and Provident Funds during a series of years, and the estimated transactions for 1918-19 and 1919-20:—

271. The Budget estimate assumed that there will be neither a net deposit into, nor a net withdrawal from, Postal Savings Banks in the current year; but owing to a substantial improvement in recent months, it is now expected that the net deposits during the year will amount to R2,10 lakhs. The Budget estimate for 1919-20 provides for a net deposit of R2,50 lakhs into Postal Savings Banks and for a growth of R84 lakhs in the deposits in the various Provident Funds for Government servants and in the similar funds of railway companies recently taken over by Government.

PRO FORMÂ ACCOUNT OF EXPENDITURE ON DELHI AND THE DELHI PROVINCE.

Prefatory Note.

I.—Scope of pro formâ account.

The following pro formâ account, with its supporting statements, exhibits the expenditure, initial and annual, on Delhi and the Delhi Province and also any receipts and savings which form a direct set-off to that expenditure. The account has been prepared in consultation with the Comptroller and Auditor General and carries his approval as regards both its form and its substantial completeness at the present date subject to the qualifications implied in the following prefatory remarks; it will be added to, or amplified later, if experience should show this to be necessary.

2. The main item of the account, as regards non-recurring expenditure, is the Delhi project proper, the figures for which appear against item 1 of Part I.—Initial Outlay. The principal recurring charge is that representing the expenditure in the new province, which appears as item 1 of Part II.—Annual Expenditure.

3. The account necessarily exhibits any expenditure occurring under the named heads, without qualification on account of contributory causes. It must, therefore, be clearly understood that the increase of expenditure, including that in the Delhi Province, is not wholly due to the change of Capital. Thus, an increase of the garrison at Delhi on strategic grounds had been already independently and strongly recommended to the Government of India by the Chief of the General Staff and endorsed by His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief in July 1911, before the transfer of the Capital had been officially proposed, and the reconstruction of the accommodation of the troops already there had long been recognised as pressing. Similarly, the recent advance in the policy relating to education and sanitation, particularly the latter, would, under any circumstances, have involved increased expenditure in this city. For practical purposes, these considerations must be ignored in the figured statements, as well as various similar points of minor pecuniary significance. The same principle will be applied to the Railway expenditure, i.e., the cost of any remodelling of the railway system which is connected with the constitution of the new Capital will be exhibited in full in the pro formâ account. A wholly independent railway requirement, such as the permanent marshalling yard which will eventually replace the temporary yard now in use, will not be shown.

• II.—Relation between the pro formâ account and the regular accounts.

4. A brief explanation is added below connecting the various items in the pro formâ account with the entries in the published accounts and estimates. Some further explanations are also to be found in the account itself and in its supporting statements.

5 The capital expenditure directly incurred on the construction of the new Imperial Capital at Delhi is shown in the regular accounts under the special head "51—Initial Expenditure on the new Capital at Delhi." The only other item of expenditure which will be recorded in the capital section of the regular accounts is that arising from diversions or re-arrangements of the railway system, which will appear under the head "48—State Railways." Item 1 of Part 1 of pro formâ account.

6 The initial expenditure incurred during the years 1911-12 and 1912-13 in connection with the provision of temporary accommodation for the Government of India at Delhi, pending the construction of the new Capital, has been treated, on the advice of the Comptroller and Auditor General, as a revenue charge, under a special minor head styled "Temporary Delhi" subordinate to the major head "44—Civil Works." Any non-recurring receipts which may eventually be obtained in connection with these temporary works, e.g., from the sale of lands and buildings when no longer required by the Government of India, will be similarly credited under a special head subordinate to the major head "XXXI—Civil Works." Item 2, ibid.
Item 11, ibid.

Items 1 and I of Part II of pro formâ account.

7. The remaining expenditure is mainly brought to account in one of two ways: either, first, as expenditure of the new Province; or, secondly, as departmental expenditure chargeable to the Department in which it is incurred.

8. The expenditure and receipts appertaining to the quasi-provincial administration of the Imperial area are brought to account in the same way as in the case of other minor administrations, and are eventually published separately, like the figures for Coorg and Baluchistan, in an appendix to the Civil Estimates. But as the Civil Estimates are not published till late in the year, a special arrangement has been made by which the figures for the Delhi province under each major head are separately shewn in the various sections of the Financial Secretary's memorandum. It will be noted that any grants which may be specially given from Imperial revenues in aid of the Delhi Municipality or other local funds will be brought into the regular accounts and, consequently, into the pro formâ account also, since they will appear as charges of the Delhi administration.

Items 3 (a) and III of Part I of pro formâ account.

9. Expenditure which does not appertain to provincial administration is recorded, as in the case of other provinces, under its appropriate departmental head in the regular accounts. Thus expenditure on the land and buildings required for the new Cantonment, and any corresponding receipts, appear under the Army and Military Works heads respectively, under both of which a special Delhi sub-head has been opened. Railway capital outlay has already been referred to. Railway revenue charges and receipts similarly come under the Railway account head. In these cases, the pro formâ account necessarily exhibits only initial expenditure and non-recurring receipts, as Military expenditure is not being permanently increased and the influence of the new Capital on the ordinary daily receipts and working expenses of the Railways cannot evidently be satisfactorily isolated. This latter consideration also applies to the case of Postal and Telegraph expenditure, which moreover represents ordinary administrative expenditure of the department, and is relatively insignificant in amount. For these reasons, in the case of this department, neither the initial outlay nor the recurring receipts and expenditure have been included.

Items 4 to 7 and I and IV of Part I, and Items 2 and 3 and II to V of Part II of pro formâ account.

10. There are also a few items of expenditure and of actual receipt or of definite saving which are not recorded in the accounts of the Delhi Province or in the departmental accounts, but which it is necessary to take into consideration in calculating the expenditure in Delhi and the Delhi Province. Most of these are self-explanatory, but attention may be called to the intended treatment of the sale-proceeds of vacated lands and buildings at Calcutta (if any) and elsewhere. These will be credited under the major heads "XXV—Miscellaneous" and "XXXI—Civil Works", and the pro formâ account will take credit only for actual Imperial receipts. No account will be taken, in the statements themselves, of book transactions, or of the considerable savings obtained from the vacation of rented accommodation, i.e., of relief in respect of rental payments which the Local Government obtains by giving up private buildings previously leased for provincial establishments, and moving the latter into offices formerly occupied by the Government of India. Any reference made to such saving will, therefore, be found in an explanatory footnote. [See Part I, Note 5.]

Item I of Part I.

11. Outlay on stores and all other expenditure incurred in England under a capital head or as a revenue charge, which can be distinguished as appertaining to the construction of Delhi or to the administration of the Delhi Province, have been included in the pro formâ account.

NOTE 1.—The head "Temporary Delhi" has been closed from 1st April 1913, subsequent expenditure being treated as part of the expenditure of the Delhi Province—see Part II of Account.

NOTE 2.—The expenditure included under item 3 (a) is that relating to the formation of the new Cantonment. Its details are as follows :—

	To end of 1917-18.	Revised 1918-19.	Budget 1919-20.
Acquisition of land	13.10
Cost of buildings	43.47	3.90	5.48
Establishment charges	3.89	58	66
Tools and Plant	1.53	19	10
TOTAL	61.99	4.67	6.24

NOTE 3.—The figures relate to charges for the acquisition of land and outlay on railway facilities at Nangal Raya.

NOTE 4.—The expenditure shown against item 7 represents mainly the proportionate cost of the Delhi Audit Office and the cost of temporary establishments employed in the Secretariats in connection with the change of Capital.

NOTE 5.—These heads will record only actual receipts obtained from the sale of the vacated buildings and land. As explained in paragraph 10 of the prefatory note, this procedure has the effect of excluding a substantial true saving in respect of rented accommodation. Thus in 1913-14 to 1917-18 the Government of Bengal, by moving their offices into the vacated Imperial buildings in Calcutta, saved Rs.38,000, partly by being enabled to dispense with private accommodation previously leased, and partly by being relieved from the necessity of renting further accommodation.

† NOTE 2.—This assignment represents the amount by which the Provincial outlay on the Delhi area exceeded the Provincial revenue obtained therefrom prior to the constitution of the Imperial enclave, i.e., the net expenditure incurred on the area of which the Local Government has now been relieved.

‡ NOTE 3.—The figures shown against item III will be subject to increase as additional offices are successively transferred from Calcutta to Delhi.

§ NOTE 4.—The figure shown against item IV is a minimum figure calculated once for all on the assumption that all offices or portions of offices which previously moved between Calcutta and Simla have subsequently moved regularly between Delhi and Simla. The actual saving throughout has been larger owing to certain establishments which previously moved to Calcutta being retained in Simla throughout the cold weather.

GOVERNMENT OF INDIA.
LEGISLATIVE DEPARTMENT.

The following Bill was introduced in the Indian Legislative Council on the 19th March, 1919 :—

No. 13 OF 1919.

A Bill to supplement the Punjab Courts Act, 1918.

Punjab Act, 1918. WHEREAS it is expedient to supplement the Punjab Courts Act, 1918; It is hereby enacted as follows :—

Short title and commencement.

1. (1) This Act may be called the Punjab Courts (Supplementing) Act, 1919.

(2) It shall come into force on such date as may be notified by the Governor General in Council in this behalf.

2. All suits, appeals, revisions, applications, reviews, executions and other proceedings pending in the Chief Court of the Punjab, shall be continued and concluded in the High Court of Judicature at Lahore as if the same had been instituted in such High Court; and the High Court of Judicature at Lahore shall exercise the same jurisdiction in relation to all such proceedings as if the same had been instituted and continued in such High Court.

STATEMENT OF OBJECTS AND REASONS.

THE new section 47-A which is incorporated in the Punjab Courts Act, 1918, by subsection (8) of section 2 of the Punjab Courts (Amendment) Act, 1919, purports to give jurisdiction to the High Court of Judicature, shortly to be constituted at Lahore, to continue the hearing of proceedings pending at the date of the publication of the Letters Patent which will constitute it. As a local legislature cannot affect the jurisdiction of a High Court established under the Government of India Act, 1915, it is considered necessary to supplement this section inserted by the Punjab Courts (Amendment) Act, 1919, by re-enacting its provisions by an Act of the Governor General in Legislative Council. At the same time, the Bill is intended to provide for pending cases from territories without the limits of the Punjab.

INDIAN CRIMINAL LAW (AMENDMENT) BILL.

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—"Sir, I beg to present the ^{11 A.M.} Report of the Select Committee on the Bill providing for an amendment of the Indian Penal Code and the Criminal Procedure Code, 1898."

FINANCIAL STATEMENT, 1919-20.

SECOND STAGE.

The Hon'ble the Vice-President :—"The Council will now proceed to the second part of the Budget discussion."

RESOLUTION RE REDUCTION OF LOAN FROM £10 TO £4 MILLIONS.

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma :—"Sir, I beg to ^{11-1 A.M.} move the following Resolution :—

"This Council recommends to the Governor General in Council that the Budget allotment providing for the raising of a loan of £10 millions be reduced by £4 millions."

[Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma.]

[8TH MARCH, 1919.]

I acknowledge with humility the fact that not being a business-man I am apt to make larger errors in speaking to the Resolution on the present occasion than those connected with business might fall into, still I have ventured to bring it forward hoping that this Council will be able to find ample reason for a justification of the proposition that I have advanced. This Resolution and the Resolution coming at the third stage marked 10* are intimately connected, and I dealt at some length with Resolution No. 10 in making my remarks on the Budget yesterday. These are inter-dependent, but I think the question can be looked at from two independent standpoints. I shall try first to approach this Resolution from the point of view as to whether in the interests of India it would be wise for the Government to venture to go into the loan market and ask for an additional loan of £10 millions this year to meet the needs of the Exchequer. The main grounds on which I propose to defend this Resolution are that the normal capacity of the loan market as exhibited by the increase of paid-up capital of joint stock companies and the deposits in the banks and otherwise has not been such in past year as to justify the Government in coming forward with such a large flotation. The experience of the last two years cannot be relied upon to any great extent, because we could rely upon the resources derived from excess profits due to artificial causes upon the flotation of artificial credit and the special exertions on the part of Government officials in securing the success of the loans. I think it would be politically unwise to make any experiments of this kind this year. I think to increase the rate of interest which is very high at present would be disastrous to business concerns, to private commercial men, to all trading men in India. I also plead that it would be unwise when large sums of money have been exported by means of contributions in the last two years to add to the export, for that would virtually be the effect of this, to add to the export in any considerable degree by increasing our expenditure. There would also be a tendency or temptation to use rigorously the powers of the Company Restriction Act lest private concerns should compete with Government. The first point that I would respectfully submit is that during the years 1913-14-15-16 for which I have figures, we find that the increase in the paid-up capital of joint stock companies has not been more than 416 lakhs in the highest year; the average for 15 years from 1901 to 1915 is 240 lakhs and it never exceeded in any year 6 crores of rupees. There was an increase in the Presidency Banks between 1913-16, the highest amounts in private deposits were 609 lakhs but that was after a fall, and the exchange banks shew an average growth of 175 lakhs and for Indian Joint Stock Companies the figures were 212 in 4 years or an average of 55; or in all 4½ crores or £3 millions. I am not talking of the increase in the Post Office Savings Banks, for the Government have that capital at their command. Now £6 millions is a fairly large sum to be raised in a poor country like India, and in this year after the war when everybody's efforts should be directed towards the flotation of companies for the purpose of increasing the industrial development of the country. Now, Sir, I pitched upon this figure of £6 millions for the reason that inasmuch as the excess profits derived during and from the war are estimated to be about that figure, it might be reasonable on the part of Government to look to the flotation of a loan of £6 millions and ask the merchants to invest that amount in Government loans though the excess profits derived from business should normally go towards increasing the capital of the concerns for industrial undertakings especially in a country like India. The experience of the last two years should not encourage us very much in anticipating large investments by the public. It is well known that Rajahs, Maharajas, noblemen, merchants, in fact all loyal subjects have strained their resources by borrowing largely from banks and otherwise on credit instruments for the purpose of taking part in the 100 million loan. Such enthusiasm and such incentives are not likely to be forthcoming the next year, and it would be dangerous politically to ask the man in the street to invest in this

* This Council recommends to the Governor General in Council that the amount of £177 millions for the construction of railways, etc., 1.48 (page 101) be reduced to £5 because it would be likely to lead to the impression that the object of Government is to raise as much money as possible from the people. I say it is a wrong impression. But it seems to me that we have to take the circumstances of India into consideration, and I hope that the Government will not look to the average man for investment. We find that in the United Kingdom and elsewhere there are banks which were started during the war for the purpose of encouraging industries. There are also amalgamations of Banks, amalgamations of Trusts, for the same purpose, and they have been to a certain extent helped morally, if not financially, by the Government; in some instances they are helped financially also. Under those circumstances, how can India even begin the faint traces of industrialism if the Government do not encourage private capitalists to combine together for the purpose, by encouraging the formation and growth of capital reserves for improving the industries of this country. I therefore think that although it is a very good proposition in theory that a debt of this description especially should be floated within the country so that it may fructify here, although it is very good as an abstract proposition, still we must have regard to the limitations of the time, and I think this year especially would not be a fairly good year for an experiment in that direction. I said that it would be practically increasing the export of capital. Well, I am not now here on the question as to whether what we have done is right or wrong; it may be that we were right, that those people who have encouraged contributions are in the right and have taken a long view of things and it is unnecessary to quarrel over that proposition. But the net result has been that the money which might otherwise have remained in India and fructified here has been, for a worthy cause it may be, exported out of India, and the question is inasmuch as this money also will necessarily have to be employed largely outside India, inasmuch as Indian business-men cannot utilise it for their own purposes, would it be wise to export the money out of India unless the necessities of the situation are so grave that there is no alternative but to face it. Therefore, we are naturally driven back to the question which I raised yesterday and which I have to raise later on, as to whether the Railway loan for this purpose is of such an emergent character, so insistent in its demand that it cannot be reasonably postponed without incurring such a considerable risk to the general financial situation.

[Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma.]

"Then I said that you should not encourage the money market in India to look to a very large rate of interest from the Government. I think there is a large question of policy involved here. Now there are a number of persons who have invested money in Government securities carrying a low rate of interest. Of course they have been hard hit during the war, and that could not be helped, but are we to add further to the depreciation of those securities by throwing again into the money market securities of the Government carrying a larger interest than even 5 per cent? I do not think as a business proposition it would be very practicable to reduce the rate of interest to very much below what we had to pay last year especially having regard to the interest that is being paid by the average borrower in the money market in India. Well, that being so, if an impression should prevail that money can be kept back until the Government pay this amount, I think in the future there would be some handicap to Government flotations, and therefore we must think twice as to whether we should embark on a policy of that description. We must remember, Sir, in this connection that what we are asking to-day is virtually not to raise a flotation of 10 millions but really of 16·9, because we are asking for the withdrawal from the reserve 6·9 million pounds which, I believe, was really money borrowed, and we must also face the fact that we shall have to meet in the coming years the payments of large sums of money towards the discharge of the loan raised to make the one hundred million gift. These are, Sir, some of the reasons from the point of view of the money market which I thought would be ample reasons for justifying a proposition of this kind.

"Then to turn to the Railways. I shall not go into the details which I may have to go into later. I shall take up that particular point. I said yesterday that we were trying to meet, to overtake, the arrears of the last four years. I think on examination it will be found that the money that was being employed prior to the war only on rolling-stock was a much smaller sum than I had given yesterday, and you will also find on examination of the figures that the produce traffic in 1919-1920 would be very much smaller than what was put in 1914-15, owing to insufficient rain-fall in many parts. However, inasmuch as I shall have to take up the Council's time on that point later on I shall not deal with it at greater length now. I hope therefore that the Council will see that there are ample reasons for asking that this loan should be restricted in the manner I have proposed."

[Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma; Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya; Sir James Meston]

11-17 A.M.

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya:—

"Mr. Vice-President, I strongly support the Resolution which has been moved by my friend Mr. Sarma. In addition to the reasons which he has urged, I would ask the Council to take one more point into consideration, and that is this. Hitherto we have never worked up to a programme like what is proposed for the next year. I feel that it is a larger programme than can reasonably be expected to be carried out if there is not really to be extravagance and waste which would be deplorable in the present state of the country. I think, Sir, therefore, that Mr. Sarma's proposal is a reasonable one. It is proposed to spend 17 crores and odd on the improvement of rolling-stock. The improvement of rolling-stock is a matter of great interest and concern to the public. I do not grudge a reasonable amount of expenditure on this item. But I consider, Sir, in view of the present industrial situation, due to the war, the expenditure proposed is excessive. We must not forget that this is the year of the war not yet closed. Peace has not yet been signed. Industries have been disorganized in England also, and I wonder how the Government expect to get during the year all the material with the money that they are budgetting for will purchase. Of course they may be able to import railway material from America, but I do not think that the patriotism of Englishmen or of Scotchmen either, will permit of that course being adopted, and if you are not to go to other countries I do not know whether you will be able to get all the material in time to be able to carry out the programme within the year for which you are budgetting.

"Secondly, assuming that you get over all the tonnage and shipping difficulties and that you get all the materials in time, I do not know if, without incurring an amount of waste in working up this programme here, you would be able to utilise the full amount within the course of the year. For these reasons I support the proposition which has been moved by my Hon'ble friend Mr. Sarma. Even if the proposition is accepted, the amount which will be left will be a large one. It would enable the Government to keep up the Railways in a sufficiently efficient condition, and we can look forward to further progress in the years that lie before us. I hope, though it is almost hopeless to hope, that the Hon'ble the Finance Member may yet see his way to curtail the programme, to reduce the amount which is budgetted for to the extent suggested, and at any rate if not exactly by that amount, then at least by something less. In the present state of the country the need for expenditure in other directions is very great, and the provision of such an enormous expenditure on the improvement of railway rolling-stock seems to me to be unjustifiable. For these reasons, I support the Resolution which has been moved by my friend Mr. Sarma."

11-20 A.M.

The Hon'ble Sir James Meston:—"Sir, when the Hon'ble Member, who has moved this Resolution, fulfils the prophecy that was made last evening and occupies this seat ten years hence, I hope that he will be a little more insistent on Hon'ble gentlemen explaining what underlies somewhat cryptic Resolutions. As this Resolution is worded it gave us all in the Finance Department a certain amount of interesting food for speculation. We had no idea what the Hon'ble Member meant or on what grounds he was going to justify his somewhat drastic proposal. I had, I confess, ~~at the time~~ I had hopes that he was going to produce out of his pocket some new and pleasant method of raising the funds without going on the money market, and I was looking forward with great anticipation to his nostrum. However, Mr. Howard, with constitutional caution, dissuaded me from entertaining any such aspiration, and then we looked down the long series of Resolutions which stand in the Hon'ble Member's name and we attempted to do a little arithmetic. We saw that on one side he proposed to reduce the expenditure on railways by £5 millions, and that he was going to cut down the Loan by £4 millions, which left one million for some other purposes, probably for the purposes stated in his three further Resolutions. However, when we added up the expenditure advocated in the next three Resolutions it came, instead of £1 million to £2 millions, and we knew the Hon'ble Member was too good an arithmetician to make a mistake of that sort, and so we came into the Council still in a position of bewilderment as to what actually the Hon'ble Member meant. He has now in an interesting and lucid speech dissolved our bewilderment, and he tells us that his sole purpose is to associate this Resolution with the Resolution which stands as No. 10 in to-day's Agenda; and in anticipation of his moving that Resolution we have had his proposal supported by my friend the Hon'ble Pandit, who takes strong exception to the extended railway programme, and tells us that it is impossible to spend the money that we have budgeted for without waste and extravagance. I am content to leave him to the tender mercies of my Hon'ble Colleague on my left when he proceeds to deal with Resolution No. 10, and I shall proceed to answer, as far as in me lies, the suggestions and the criticisms that have been made by the Hon'ble Mover of this specific Resolution before us. He says that he wants us to stay out of the market this year except to the extent of £6 millions, in order, I take it, to give the market a rest, to give the market an opportunity of fulfilling other demands upon it and so on; and that is in substance his first substantial reason for reducing our loan. He says the shortage of floating money is apparent from the returns of the savings banks, and that we shall be unable now to raise more than £6 millions. I have listened with profound respect, but I am afraid with very little conviction, to the Hon'ble Member's a priori arguments on that aspect. We can at least have a try and see what the market will give us. The same argument would have deterred us from raising loans during the last two or three years, and still we did not do so very badly with those loans, as he will find if he will look at the statistics of our borrowing operations. We have intentionally very largely reduced our demands for this year in order to give the very opportunity which he is anxious for, in order to give new companies an opportunity of coming on the market or old companies an opportunity of increasing their capital, and I may say that they are already beginning to do so on a very satisfactory scale. Another reason the Hon'ble Member has suggested for our not showering money upon railways is that we, by pursuing such a policy, would be exporting more of our own money. There is already a great deal of money of ours lying in London, and he says he does not want us to add to it. If that were the result of our borrowing, I should most cordially agree with him, but fortunately the result of what we are proposing to do is exactly the opposite. What we are going to do is to import money, we are going to bring out not gold or silver, but wealth. After all money is only a token of wealth. We are going to bring out wealth in the form of railway material against this £4 millions, and the wealth will be used for remunerative purposes. I do not think the Hon'ble Member need be afraid that there is any financial heresy or economic fallacy underlying these proposals.

" Briefly, Sir, the Hon'ble Member's proposition involves one of two consequences. The first consequence is that we should reduce our loan and retain the railway figure. This assumes that the present Resolution is dealt with without reference to its corollary later. If we accept this consequence, it implies that we have to pinch our Ways and Means; we have got to refrain from paying for something else. If you will turn to page 86, you will see the sort of thing you will have to cut down; we should have to cut down the discharge of Treasury Bills, or go without paying for the silver we have purchased from America: or we might probably have to refrain from paying His Majesty's Government certain dues which we owe them. I am sure the Hon'ble Member, like myself, has a constitutional objection to postpone or reduce the payment of our lawful dues, and yet that is the position into which he is forcing us. The second alternative would be to assume that, along with the reduction of the loan, we are going to reduce our railway programme. Of course we still have to see whether the Council approve of any such suggestion, but if they did take the extreme step and reduce our railway programme correspondingly, what is the Hon'ble Member doing? He is preventing us from doing the very thing that he advised us to do last night. He was telling us how gravely wrong we are in allowing our paper currency to be inflated to the extent that it is; he was telling us that we are gravely wrong in having so many Treasury Bills floating about the market. I do not say we are right in this, and if circumstances had not been too much for us, we certainly would not have fallen into these uncomfortable habits. But even if our railway programme were reduced, would not the Hon'ble Member let us have our £4 millions in order to help in clearing these floating loans to which he takes such strong, such just exception? Would he not allow us to pay off our Treasury Bills and withdraw some of our surplus currency notes? I think the Hon'ble Member is hardly consistent. On the Resolution as it stands, without reference to any other subsidiary arguments based on the Resolution which is yet to be moved, the Government must oppose his motion."

[Sir James Meston; Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma.]

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—"Sir, it is difficult at the stage at which we have arrived for the Government to do otherwise perhaps than what they have done, namely, oppose the Resolution, but I must confess that I have not been able to be convinced by the Hon'ble Member's arguments. Of course it is easier for me to be convinced than for the Hon'ble Member to be convinced by my arguments, because I have got no particular position to defend, and I should therefore have very gladly accepted the Hon'ble Member's conclusions if I had felt that there was considerable force in his remarks. Well, Sir, I have already alluded to the experience of the last two years in my original remarks and tried to show how that cannot afford any standard whatsoever for a judgment as to what is likely to happen this year unless a somewhat similar attempt be made by the Government to push forward their scheme of flotation of this loan. I have not the slightest doubt that if the Government will it, they will have this £10 millions, and even more, but the only question is whether they should will it having regard to these circumstances, nor have I the slightest doubt that next year the Hon'ble Sir James Meston will be able to say—"Mr. Sarma said the loan could not be floated, but we have been able to find the £10 millions easily." But that would not be any justification for saying that the previous market experience has to be altogether neglected and that we ought to rely only or mainly on the experience of the last two years. I shall not deal with that point at greater length.

"Then it was said that my Resolution did not give any reasons whatsoever for the reduction, and that therefore the Finance Department were naturally at a loss to know exactly what was in my mind when I framed my Resolution. I am very sorry for not having been more argumentative, or rather, for not having been argumentative at all; but I was afraid I might be caught by the rule which says that Members should not be argumentative when they frame Resolutions. I shall attempt to give my reasons hereafter. But I may say, Sir, that one object I had in view in moving this Resolution was to have a reserve available to the Government which, along with other resources on which I shall dwell when I come to the next Resolution, would give me the monies that I want on the second, third and fourth Resolutions. That was one of my objects, and there is no need for concealing that fact. I ask for 2 millions and there is a surplus of 1·868 millions. I had hoped to be able to show that expenditure marked as 'Contingent' could be easily utilised by the Government, who had only a small revenue for indefinite purposes, for the purposes that I suggest; we should be no difficulty whatsoever in the Government finding money to spend in the ways which I shall indicate when I come to the next Resolutions; and this one million was particularly meant for that purpose. But apart from that I tried to put this matter from two standpoints. The first was independent of the railway programme; but I never said the two were unconnected. I did not wish to detain the Council with any lengthy remarks on the last proposition, because I thought it would be wrong on my part to deal with that at great length now. These are inter-dependent propositions, as I have already said; and I am confident that I can put myself in the hands of the Legislative Council on the merits of this Resolution viewed apart from the railway Resolution as well as in conjunction therewith."

The Resolution was put and rejected.

RESOLUTION RE INCREASE OF BUDGET ALLOTMENT FOR SANITATION.

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—"Sir, I beg to put the next Resolution:— 11-35 A.M.

'This Council recommends to the Governor-General in Council that the Budget allotment '24-B.—Sanitation, etc.,' be increased by Rs50 lakhs towards the equipment and improvement of the Health Department, and by Rs50 lakhs for the improvement of water-supply in rural areas.'

"I trust and hope that now that we are to have the full loan of 10 millions, the Government will be able to view this Resolution more sympathetically than they did the last Resolution. What I feel is that the Government and the Legislative Council will be at one in thinking that the money should be found for this object if it can be found for any object at all.

"Sir, supposing the statesmen attending the League of Nations in Europe, or for the matter of that any of us, were to open a morning newspaper and read there that on account of some preventible cause or some preventible calamity the whole of the population of Greece and Serbia, or Belgium or one of the smaller countries of Europe, or for the matter of that, Scotland or Ireland, was swept away. What would their sensations be; what would their feelings be like? Would they give way to a fatalistic formula or would drastic attempts be made to meet a situation of a similar character should it unfortunately ever arise? I do not propose to be theatrical in dealing with this proposition because the hard facts of the situation are sufficiently clear, potent, influential and convincing to need any mere display of sentimentality. The country seems to have taken the loss of 5 million souls owing to influenza rather coolly and cynically. The Eastern temperament, which accepts with abject submission what it conceives to be the decrees of Providence, has never been known to do better; but we expect the Western statesmen ruling our destinies to put more force into the machinery in order to avoid such calamities. Put from the purely business point of view, what does the loss of these 5 million men, women and children amount to? I tried to say yesterday that at the very, very low figure Rs. 60 per human being the loss would amount to 30 crores per annum, and capitalised at 20 times it would amount to 600 crores. But Rs. 60 per head is a very low figure. It may be said that influenza is admittedly one of those visitations which cannot be exactly foreseen and prevented. But what about the preventible mortality that is going on in this country? Seven millions are being carried away, partly owing to inevitable causes and partly owing to preventible causes. I think it is acknowledged on all hands that deaths from cholera could be prevented. Deaths from dysentery and diarrhoea, which really largely come under the head 'Cholera' and even if they come under dysentery and diarrhoea, are largely preventible, help to swell the list of mortality. Small-pox is an annual visitant, to say nothing of malarial fever, which carries away more than 4 millions in a single year. If we take the normal death-rate in Europe at 14 to 17 per cent. and the normal death-rate here during the last ten years for which figures are available at 31·8 per cent., we see at once the remarkable disparity between them; and even if we assume that owing to an Eastern country being in question the rate of mortality would be naturally higher, I think the preventible deaths can be assumed to be not less than 2½ millions a year. I ask you again to look at it from the business point of view, the sordid business point of view, let alone from the higher moral or humanitarian point of view. What does the loss amount to? I am bringing these facts, Sir, prominently to your notice to ask the Council and the Government to accept a new principle, a departure from orthodox methods, in dealing with this situation. I know I shall be told that the pagoda tree cannot be shaken, that after meeting the ordinary needs of the country we are trying to do what we can in the way of giving medical help, in the way of promoting sanitation, and that possibly the Government can show that they have done more than other Governments in the past. But I ask you to depart from that doctrine; I ask you to look at it from the Western standpoint, to look upon the expenditure that you should incur hereafter as a sort of national insurance against debility, death and starvation, insurance against industrial fatiguing causes, industry-defeating causes, production-decreasing causes. I ask you to look at it from that point of view and find the necessary money for sanitation, for medical help. If you look at it from that point of view, I think that even 30 crores a year would not be a bad sum to start with. But I know that that is a ridiculously high figure and one which need not be entertained for a minute. I have put my proposition now on the Agenda chiefly for the purpose of getting the principle accepted at the nearest possible date, and for something being done to start the principle into active vital enforcement. That is the reason, Sir, why I have asked that this 50 lakhs should be provided for the health department and 50 lakhs for the water-supply in rural areas. Yesterday we were told that the Governments of the Provinces had exceeded the Budget estimates of the previous year by as much as 40 lakhs, had exceeded the sum which was generally utilised in previous years, and therefore we should thank our stars that in spite of there being no specific instructions the Local Governments were very wise in using their discretion in drawing upon their ancient hoards for the purpose of meeting these new disbursements. We are thankful that there has been an increase, and we deeply regret that in some of the provinces there is a large surplus still available which has not been utilised owing to the indifference, the reckless indifference I would call it, of the Provincial Governments in not foreseeing expenditure and not planning beforehand what their proposals should be in case money was available. At any rate, Sir, it is the duty of the Government of India, having the supreme control, to whip up the Local Governments into active work, if they fail to do their duty. I do not see what the Government of India are for if they do not discharge that duty. Now, what is 40 lakhs when the task is so gigantic? I was very much amused when these increased estimates and percentages were indulged in yesterday. I know that some of us when dealing with percentages open ourselves to the same remark. I remember when I was young some students in colleges newly started used to boast of cent. per cent. successes of the students that went up from those colleges, whereas the percentage of successes in older established college was very poor. Well, if the number sent up is one and that one passes, the percentage is 100. If a hundred boys are sent up and only 20 pass, the percentage is only 20, but still the number who have passed is 20. Similarly, when you deal with percentages, you must be very careful as to whether the money you spend has been proportionate to the undertaking and the increased ratio has a relative significance when there is a large expenditure in the past, whereas when you were spending very little in the past any small addition would swell the percentage. I think my remarks would be perfectly justified when you look at the ridiculously small sums that you have spent on sanitation in past years. Therefore there is no reason why we should not look at it over the percentages, or think that it is such a glorious record when we indulge in the pastime of dwelling on percentages to suit our own arguments. I submit, Sir, that I understand the limitations of the purse and that it is impossible to fly in the air and make a very large provision, but I hope I have said enough to convince you that on the first part of the Resolution there is need to depart in principle from our ancient practice and look upon the health department as a national insurance department just as much or just as little as the War Office is. Is then the 50 lakhs I have asked for too much? There are 1,100 divisions with an average population of 200,000 roughly in India. Even if you give one assistant surgeon and two sub-assistant surgeons with the necessary staff and a little money to spare, each division or sub-division would not have more than Rs. 45,000. But you will have a nucleus of a staff which can be developed. I believe, Sir, that it is absolutely necessary that the Government of India and possibly the Provincial Governments should have sanitary experts at the head to warn, to think out these problems, to understand what is going on in the rest of the world, to inform intelligently and in time the responsible Governments of the needs of the situation, to advise Provincial Governments and local bodies as to what is being done to bring the delinquencies, the omissions, the irregularities and the lapses of these subordinate administrative bodies to the notice of higher authorities for correction and reproof. I know that the present medical administration is doing splendid work, has been very, very sorely exercised during the last few years, and it would be ridiculous, wrong, cruel and mad to attribute to them any lack of industry or zeal to do what lies in human power to meet the situation. But it is impossible to expect from such a meagrely staffed body results at all proportionate to the needs of the situation. I therefore respectfully submit that the day should not be postponed, should not be unduly postponed, when we should give these bodies the necessary staff to undertake this task.

[Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma.]

[8TH MARCH, 1919.]

[Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma ; Vice-President.]

“Much of what I have to say with reference to this and the next Resolution would cover a portion of the Financial Statement. I hope to be well within my time, Sir, but if I trespass my time-limit on this I shall curtail my speech on the next. I respectfully request the indulgence of the Chair because I do not wish to take up the time of the Council unnecessarily . . .

The Hon'ble the Vice-President:—“I am afraid that to-day I must hold Hon'ble Members strictly to the time-limit.”

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—“Well, then Sir, that is so far as the first part of the Resolution is concerned. Then, with regard to the second part, I have only to say this. I have in my mind a vivid picture of what is passing with regard to this water-supply in rural areas, both where there is an abundant source of supply available and where there is no water at all. In dry villages the task is how to find water, and how to assist materially in adding to the amenities of life. From the industrial point of view you will save a large waste of time by women not having to spend two to three hours in seeking to get a pot of water for their daily use. It need not be expatiated upon. In other parts, in delta and other tracts, where water is available, it is so filthy that the first flushes bring cholera and dysentery. With a little organisation you can improve it. I therefore hope that this item of expenditure need not be further expatiated upon to recommend itself to the acceptance of Council.

“Then we come to the question as to whether there is money for it. We have a surplus of £688,000. In dealing with this proposition apart from the question of the surplus, I ask you to consider whether it is not time for the Government to act upon the principle of the Reform proposals, in framing their Budget. I ask you to do this for the reason that apart from normal expenditure on the Army you budgetted for nearly 180 lakhs from revenue in trying to get the ~~Army~~ ^{Army} budget was promised last year. The excess profits duty is estimated at Rs. 7·5 millions, therefore if we make allowances for the fact that the rest of the money has been taken from revenue whereas it is a legitimate loan charge or taxation charge, I am within my rights in asking that the Imperial surplus should be used for this purpose. I said yesterday that if you leave the normal growth of revenue under land-revenue, court-fees, etc., you would have 175 lakhs to be given to the provinces or minus income-tax 160 lakhs. I ask that at least indulgence might be shown if this is to be a Provincial burden. You may treat it as a gift by the Imperial Government to the Provinces, the Provinces being left to utilise what is likely to be their own in the near future. Any way the money is theirs and, together with the 201 lakhs you propose to leave the Provinces on the Budget figure of 1917-18, there will be ample money in the Provinces to meet this expenditure. I beg that you may treat this money as a gift from the Imperial Government because the Reform proposals have not come into effect. Money is necessary for the purposes I have set out, and I am insistent for this reason that if we ignore the true Imperial surplus there is every risk of the military expenditure being swollen to enormous proportions so that you will practically get out of the country in the shape of Imperial taxation every pie leaving nothing for Provincial development. The matter should be looked at from that point of view. There is not the same surplus available in all Provinces alike, in Madras it is nil; in three Provinces taken together it is 7·4 lakhs. I think the matter should be viewed from this point of view, and I therefore request that the Government may be pleased to take this Resolution into their sympathetic consideration and vote the money."

[Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma; Mr. W. A. Ironside.]

11-55 A.M.

The Hon'ble Mr. W. A. Ironside:—"Sir, I did not intend to rise again to-day, for I thought after yesterday's experience that Mr. Sarma would have hesitated to get up and repeat some of the arguments then used as to the financial troubles of this country, but apparently like the brook of poetic fame he goes on for ever. I listened with much interest to his exposition and explanation of the financial features of the Budget. Am I to understand that this is the financial view as made in Madras? because if that is so I can quite understand the libel which has been levelled at that Presidency. In regard to the views put forward by Mr. Sarma on the subject of the necessities of sanitation, medical relief and water-supply, I may say that there is no one more insistent, more eager, than I am that these should be provided throughout India, but in questions of finance, no matter whether one is dealing with Imperial finance, Provincial finance, commercial finance, or shopkeeper's finance, one has to cut one's coat according to one's cloth. At the present time the Hon'ble the Finance Member has gone out of his way to put every rupee into the pool, and it has been done in a most extraordinarily generous manner on behalf of each and every department. When one deals with finance, and especially expenditure, the immediate necessity is to see what expenditure gives the quickest return. Now, as I pointed out yesterday, if railways are to be run less efficiently everything else in the chain of economic progress must be checked, retarded, and ultimately, if the plan be continued, stopped. I should be more inclined to listen to Mr. Sarma if I felt that this expenditure on sanitation were to have immediate effect. Only yesterday I read the Bengal Government's Report on some of the municipalities of that Province, and there a statement is made of the utter incapacity of the educated classes to grasp the value of sanitation. I refer to the Dacca Municipality; we have any number of other similar cases. I know that industrial concerns in Bengal and Bihar and Orissa are daily spending money on water-supply schemes and on sanitation; and if we could but get the assistance, the practical assistance and the advice, of the educated people in our midst, our task would be so much lessened. We spend money day after day on this or that scheme for the amelioration of the people, and one of our main desires is to get the educated classes to assist us in the task of ours. So Mr. Sarma must not think that I am against the principle of Sanitation. I am not. But when he talks of ~~that~~ I think it will be fair to say, he is wasting the time of this Council on expounding views which are economically unsound, and I feel that it is necessary to make some protest against some of them, otherwise without a protest they might be accepted outside this Council as correct."

[8TH MARCH, 1919.]

[Mr. W. A. Ironside; Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjea.]

The Hon'ble Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjea:—"Sir, I did not want to take any part at all in the discussions of to-day, and I had imposed upon myself what I would call the vow of silence. But I am obliged to break that vow in consequence of the observations of my Hon'ble friend to my left.

12 P.M.

"My Hon'ble friend was pleased to say in the course of the observations which he has addressed to us that the educated classes—I suppose he has in his mind the educated classes in Bengal with whom he is in close touch—that the educated classes have exhibited an utter incapacity to grasp sanitary problems. I distinctly challenge that statement, and I say that whatever sanitary progress has been made in my Province has been largely due if not to the initiative, at any rate, to the persistent and strenuous efforts of the educated classes. I am not content with making a general statement of that kind. Every general statement should be tested by reference to concrete facts, and I desire to call the attention of my Hon'ble friend and of this Council to facts which, I think, will completely disprove the allegation which my Hon'ble friend has made with reference to the incapacity of the educated classes to grasp sanitary problems. Let us come to facts. My fact No. 1 is—The complete change in the sanitary condition of the town of Faridpur has been due to the initiative, the public spirit and the foresight of the Chairman of that Municipality, Mr. Amvica Charan Muzumdar, who was in 1916 the President of the Lucknow Congress and who was in consequence of his sanitary efforts congratulated by Sir John Woodburn, then Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, as the Grand Old Man of East Bengal. He it was who projected the water-works of Faridpur. He it was who raised the funds for those water-works. He it was who completed those works, and the Government thanked him on the completion of those water-works.

"Then let us take case No. 2. Take the case of the district of Krishnagar. The water-works are about to be undertaken. Who was it that initiated these water-works? Again, a non-official Chairman of the Krishnagar Municipality, my respected friend Rai Bishambar Nath Bahadur. They are appealing to Government for funds.

"Take again the case of Hoogli, which has a history behind it, and I need not go into it here. There again the water-works were initiated by my friend the Chairman of the Municipality, Rai Manindra Chandra Mitter Bahadur, and the water-works were completed, and, I think, he himself made a very large contribution towards the water-works.

"Then, Sir, coming nearer home, here is my friend to my right the Hon'ble the Maharaja of Kassimbazar than whom there is not in Bengal a more patriotic, a more liberal, a more philanthropic public man. We have got the water-works at Berhampur, and I think he was Chairman of that Municipality for some little time, and these works have completely transformed the sanitary condition of the place. Who was it, again I ask, who initiated those water-works and bore the burden of them? I think my friend paid about half a lakh. No, I stand corrected, my friend paid two lakhs for those water-works. The health of Berhampur is very different now from what it was twenty years ago. It was the hot bed of malaria. People used to run away from Berhampur. But now Berhampur, I will not say, is a sanitarium, but at any rate it is largely free from the scourge of malarial fever. There is that great educational institution the Krishnath College towards which my friend has paid a large sum of money, and I think he contributes about 3 lakhs of rupees a year towards the maintenance of educational institutions and the college is filled by 1,100 boys, healthy and strong young men, and the town is healthy owing to the water-works initiated by my friend, and the people of Berhampur feel deeply grateful to him for them.

“Take again the case of Murshidabad. Here again the initiative is due to Indian gentlemen who, I am told, are unfit to grasp sanitary problems. I am sorry that a statement of that kind should have been made by my friend the Hon’ble Mr. Ironside, for whom I have great personal respect. I am truly sorry that such an observation should have been made. Whether you pass this Resolution or not, that is another matter, but I am here to vindicate the character of my countrymen against the unjust aspersions which have been cast in this Council Chamber, and I should have rejoiced, speaking to the Resolution itself, I should have rejoiced if the Hon’ble the Finance Member could see his way to accept the Resolution of my Hon’ble friend Mr. Sarma. Wherever water-works have been extended, they have been attended with the greatest improvement in the sanitary condition of the place. Malaria has considerably abated, if it has not altogether disappeared. It is the one boon which the people appreciate ; it is the one boon for which they are prepared to make sacrifices, and it is the one boon which the Government ought to extend to the people.

“My friend has referred to the incapacity of the people. There is another matter which I forgot to allude to. A Conference was held not long ago for the purpose of supplying water-works to the riparian municipalities. I was a member of that Conference. It was held in the Presidency Commissioner’s office. The estimates came to about 36 lakhs of rupees, and the representatives of the municipalities, and I was one of them, were willing to pay the taxes that would be necessary for the water-works. Educated India appreciates the boon of sanitation, and no stronger evidence of the fact could be found than in the constant appeals which are renewed year after year in this Council Chamber for sanitary grants and the enhancement of the sanitary grants. My friend’s Resolution itself is proof positive of the eager and keen interest which we feel in sanitary problems and in the improvement of sanitary areas. I do hope that my friend the Hon’ble the Finance Minister, if he can see his way, will accept this Resolution.”

12-10 P.M.

The Hon’ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya :—“Mr. Vice-President, I give my hearty support to the proposal put forward by my friend Mr. Sarma. I do not wish to say anything more with regard to the remarks which the Hon’ble Mr. Ironside made, because I take it that he will withdraw those remarks and express his regret for having made them. I think, Sir, the proceedings of this Council and of the Provincial Legislative Councils bear most eloquent if also painful testimony to the strenuous efforts which educated Indians have been making towards the improvement of the sanitation of the country, and I think they bear also regrettable proof of the unwillingness of the Government to do as much as is needed in this direction.

“Now here we are in this year with a large Budget in which a very heavy sum is being set apart for expenditure on military purposes, and in which a very large programme of railway construction has been provided for. In these circumstances, I do not think it is a sin for an Indian who feels that there should not be so many preventible deaths in his country to appeal to the Government to set apart more money for the health department and for supplying drinking water to the people. My friend Mr. Sarma has pointed out how great, how pressing, is the need for more money being spent on the health department. I know from my little experience as President of the Seva Samiti in Allahabad how great is the need for supplying medical relief to the people in the villages. Our volunteers have gone into the villages during the time of influenza and distributed medicines so far as they could ; but medicines have been asked for from long distances and we have not been able to supply them. The need for medical relief is patent, it is crying, it is insistent. I think, Sir, a Government which spends so much on other departments, which is anxious to be up-to-date in other departments, ought to find money to give the necessary amount of medical relief and protection to the people. The heavy death-roll to which my friend Mr. Sarma has referred speaks for itself. It is high time that the Government made a resolve to reduce this death-rate and made a strenuous effort to achieve that end. We have this sad fact that six millions of people, according to official calculation, have been carried away by influenza. There are some people who imagine that these deaths from influenza could not be avoided. I can say from my personal knowledge and experience of the work we have done that these were preventable deaths, most of which, if not all, could have been avoided. They were deaths brought about by insufficient food, by insufficient sanitary surroundings, by want of early medical help, by want of milk to give to the patients when they were down, and by want of other remedies and ameliorating conditions which the Government and the people working together could secure and should have secured to the people. Apart from this influenza, the ordinary death-rate also has been very high. I do not want to take up the time of the Council by repeating the figures which we have been used in the past to refer to in this Council, but I ask the Council, when it is providing for expenditure on other departments, to find the 50 lakhs which is asked for to increase and strengthen the Medical department.

"As for the second item, the item for providing pure drinking water, it seems to me a sad thing that in this Council, consisting of so many European members and consisting of Indian members from all the Provinces, it should be necessary to argue this matter with the Government. One would have expected that the Government would have itself made ample provision for providing healthy drinking water in areas where it is not available. But when a Resolution has been brought forward, I hope the Government will see their way to accept it. The want of good drinking water has been responsible for numerous deaths which could have been prevented. My friend Mr. Banerjee has referred to his experience in Bengal. We have the same experience in our United Provinces. Everywhere where good drinking water has been provided, cholera has nearly died out, at any rate has become a less frequent visitor than it used to be, and we have found the health of the people generally improved. My friend Mr. Ironside said that he did not feel sure that expenditure on the head which Mr. Sarma has asked for was going to bring the quickest return. He also said that if the expenditure on sanitation were to have an immediate effect, he would have supported the Resolution. I cannot understand my friend. I do not know that there is any expenditure which would have a more immediate effect than the provision of good drinking water for the people. Everywhere that has been the experience. Of course it will not bring a quick return in the shape of pounds, shillings and pence, it will not bring any quick return in the shape of rupees, but that is not the only return which Government may be concerned with. Business-men may lay too much stress upon that aspect of the question, but the Government has a larger business, a more humanitarian programme before it, and it has to consider what money is needed in order to prevent the premature death among people who should live normally to an old age. For these reasons, I would urge that the Government should accept this Resolution and provide the money that is asked for. If this is done I hope that the havoc of the last epidemic, such a death-rate, as we have had the misfortune to witness this year will not be repeated in future years. If this provision is not made, there will be widespread feeling in the country, that the Government is not sufficiently alive to the medical needs of the people, and to the sanitary needs of the people, and I regret to think that they will have justification for taking such a view. I commend this Resolution to the acceptance of the Government."

The Honble Mr. W. A. Ironside:—"Sir, in making 12-16 P.M.

The Honble the Vice-President:—"We will certainly hear any explanation Mr. Ironside would like to make."

[Mr. W. A. Ironside; Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya; Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjea; Sir Dinshaw Wacha.] [8TH MARCH, 1919.]

The Hon'ble Mr. W. A. Ironside:—"Sir, in making the remarks I made just now I knew they would raise a storm of protest....."

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya:—"Condemnation, not protest."

The Hon'ble Mr. W. A. Ironside:—"Very well then, condemnation, from Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjea. When one makes a statement like that, surely it may be taken for granted that I did not do so without knowledge of the subject and without a thorough grasp of the facts, and I agree there are many individuals who are working hard, spending money, using their influence in favour of this most desirable object. But we cannot get away from the fact that a great proportion of the educated classes have failed to support the schemes for sanitation that have been provided by friends like those on my right here, and the case has been brought to my personal knowledge by facts, where the surrounding educated classes of the inhabitants could have done so much to render sanitary schemes with which I have been connected far more beneficial to the surrounding people. I withdraw anything in the shape of an imputation against individuals, it was never intended"

The Hon'ble Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjea:—"Against us as a class."

The Hon'ble Mr. W. A. Ironside:—"Against the great majority of them."

The Hon'ble Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjea:—"I rise to point out that the imputation was not against individuals. 'Educated class,' I think those were the words used, and I submit that my friend, in view of the statement which he himself has made, will be good enough to withdraw the allegation so far as the class is concerned. Individuals you may pillory as much as you like, but I think I am entitled to ask my Hon'ble friend to withdraw the imputation as against the class."

The Hon'ble Mr. W. A. Ironside:—"I leave it to Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjea. I am quite prepared to withdraw it, but I cannot get away from the fact that if we are going to spend money, if it is to be on railways or on sanitation, it should be spent where it may secure the quickest return, and where I have spent money on sanitation my difficulty has been to get that return by reason of the apathy of the large number of educated people whom one would ordinarily have expected would have grasped the benefits placed at the disposal of their less educated neighbours."

12-20 P.M.

The Hon'ble Sir Dinshaw Wacha:—"I am very glad, Sir, that Mr. Ironside has seen the advisability of withdrawing the accusation made against the educated classes. I read generally the annual Administration Reports of almost all the Presidencies and Provinces, and, as far as sanitation is concerned, during the last ten or fifteen years, I have seen that in every municipality and district board the educated classes are perfectly alive to the advantages of a good supply of potable water of a health-giving kind, and also to conservancy and other matters which help to prevent a high mortality. That being the case, I say, I am glad, Sir, that Mr. Ironside has thought fit to withdraw this allegation, which certainly is a libel against the educated classes. Apart from that, Sir, I am a member (though I will cease to be so on the 30th March) of the Bombay Municipal Corporation for thirty years, and nobody will deny at a moment that I have been one of the foremost members there to do every thing in my power, whenever the occasion arose, not only to increase the water-supply but also to see that medical relief and sanitation had the best chances of success from the Municipality as far as funds permitted. I do not mean to say that I am the only member of the Municipality who has done this; the whole of the Bombay Municipal Corporation has been insistent and useful in these directions. In Bombay, it was the educated classes who, in 1885, first raised the very big question of a large supply of pure water from the Tansa Lake at a cost of 1½ crores of rupees.

[8TH MARCH, 1919.]

[Sir Dinshaw Wacha; Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya; Vice-President.]

“The population increased, and only two years ago we were able to construct what we call a duplicate main at the cost of another crore. Even then we find now that the water-supply will not suffice, and what are we doing to meet the inadequacy? At the present moment my Corporation is very busy attempting to get an estimate for a third supply of water, which will cost perhaps another crore. In ten years' time the Bombay Municipality will nearly have spent something like 4 to 5 crores on water-supply alone.

“Then look at our conservancy, which means cleansing the streets and removing nightsoil and other things which, if not removed, would cause great nuisance and high mortality. They are doing everything in Bombay for preventing the spread of cholera and other infectious diseases. They did everything to check the influenza epidemic when the latter was at its worst in September last, and when there was a heavy holocaust of as many as 750 deaths a day. Every educated young man—particularly from the colleges, volunteered to go about the worst parts of the town and very ably seconded the efforts of the Municipality—so ably that the whole press eulogised the services of every one of these young educated men. That certainly showed the spirit of our educated classes as to sanitation and prevention of diseases. Not only in the city but in other places too, like Poona and Ahmedabad, they did similar work.....

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya:—“Some of those young men died.”

The Hon'ble the Vice-President:—“Order, order.”

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya:—“I was only reminding my Hon'ble friend that some of these young men have died doing the work.”

The Hon'ble the Vice-President:—“Hon'ble Members should address to the Chair any remarks they may have to make.”

The Hon'ble Sir Dinshaw Wacha:—“Exactly, that is the rule we follow in the Bombay Corporation. We always address all remarks to the Chair. That is a constitutional procedure and you, Sir, have ruled rightly.

“Of course, my Hon'ble friend Pandit Malaviya is right when he says that some of these educated young men died while doing their duty. I know of a very able young man, Mr. Netrajan, who sacrificed his life for this purpose while ministering to the afflicted. But, Sir, we need not further pursue this subject. I do admit that there are backward municipalities and other district and local boards which cannot go ahead for want of funds; but the spirit is there, and if there was more money they would do a great deal more in the way of water-supply and conservancy. As far as the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma's Resolution is concerned, I think it is a pertinent one. I myself yesterday told the Council what I thought was done by the Imperial Government itself in regard to sanitation. The accounts for 1917-18 showed an expenditure of £698,000 and the Budget estimates for £998,000. I do not consider the revised estimates as complete, therefore compare the completed accounts of 1917-18 with the Budget estimate of the coming year. I find that we have increased the sanitation expenditure by nearly 57 per cent. As I said yesterday, when referring to this question, as far as sanitation is concerned, I think there is a bigger problem looming even than that of water-supply, because once the water-supply is put on a proper footing, there is an end to it. But a more serious problem of a permanent nature is the housing of the poorer classes in every part of the country. Insanitary housing is the cause of a greater holocaust of lives than even want of good drinking water. Therefore I observed that whatever is done in future by the Government in co-operation with private enterprise for the better sanitary housing of the poorer classes of the people would go a great way to reduce the prevailing heavy death-rate in India. That being my conviction, I associate myself with the Hon'ble Mr. Banerjea and say that, if the Hon'ble the Finance Minister could see his way to increase the grant in spite of the exigencies of the financial estimates, I for one would be very glad to support the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma's proposition."

12-26 P.M.

The Hon'ble Mr. Malcolm Hogg :—" Sir, in according in a limited degree of support to this Resolution, I do not wish it to be understood that I necessarily consider that the figure of 50 lakhs suggested by the Hon'ble Mover is feasible under the circumstances of this year ; but I do feel that the need for increased expenditure on sanitation and medical relief in particular in this country is so great that I cannot let this Resolution pass without according to it a degree of support, in principle, at any rate.

" I do not wish to take up the time of the Council by going lengthily into the whole question of the need for sanitation and medical relief ; nor do I want to follow my Hon'ble friend, Mr. Ironside, into the somewhat thorny question as to whether people always take the best possible advantage of such facilities as are afforded them. I know of cases within my own experience where certain mofussil municipalities have shown a regrettable indifference to the necessities of sanitation. But that seems to me to be a question which is rather beside the point in discussing this Resolution. That might be an argument if we were discussing under whose control the expenditure of money granted for sanitation should be. But we are not discussing that question to-day fortunately. The only question before us now is as to whether there is a need for increased expenditure on these subjects in this country, and I do not think that can be denied. I should like to give just one very brief instance as showing the sort of conditions that I imagine prevail over very large parts of this country. During the recent influenza epidemic in a district which I know well and in which I have industrial interests, the only medical relief open to a large number of villages, the only means of coping with the epidemic at all, was our own doctor, employed at our own mills there primarily for the purpose of looking after the people who resided in our own village. The local authorities had to come to us and ask us to lend our doctor to the surrounding villages and to supply the medicines. We were very glad to do so, but I do not think it is right that a considerable number of villages should be entirely dependent for medical relief on the chance fact that private interests happen to maintain a doctor and a dispensary in the neighbourhood."

12-29 P.M.

The Hon'ble Rai Sitanath Ray Bahadur :—" Sir, I beg to associate myself and to express my sympathy with the Resolution which has been moved by my Hon'ble friend, Mr. Sarma, by giving it my humble support. In doing so, I also beg to refute the charge that the educated classes, so far as Bengal is concerned (I do not know what is the case in other Provinces), are backward in supporting any movement to improve sanitation and water-supply. So far as I know, and so far as I personally am concerned, I have all my life advocated the desirability of supplying good drinking water to rural areas, and I have in my humble way spent some money in supplying filtered water in one place alluded to by my Hon'ble friend."

[8TH MARCH, 1919.] [Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjea ; Rai Sitanath Ray Bahadur ; Vice-President ; Rai Bahadur Krishna Sahay.]

The Hon'ble Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjea :—“How much?”

The Hon'ble Rai Sitanath Ray Bahadur :—“Rupees 25,000 only. It may be that the educated classes on account of their poverty have not always been to the fore in supporting movements which go to improve their sanitary surroundings or to improve the water-supply ; but may I at the same time point out to the Hon'ble Mr. Ironside that whilst it is very easy to level criticism at the educated classes for their backwardness in these matters, what has the Calcutta Improvement Trust done so far to improve the condition, to remove congestion and bring about better sanitary conditions in the northern quarter of the town of Calcutta ?

“We, two or three Indian members of the Calcutta Improvement Trust, have been crying ourselves hoarse to improve the sanitary condition of the northern quarter of the town ; but all the efforts of the Trust have been practically directed to improve the areas to the south of Chowringhee, and not to the improvement of the northern quarter of the town. I hope Mr. Ironside will kindly try and find out whether this is so or not. We have been submitting note after note—making suggestions for the improvement and opening up of the northern portion of Calcutta but to no effect

The Hon'ble the Vice-President :—“I think the Hon'ble Member is travelling very far from the Resolution. This is not the Calcutta Improvement Trust.”

The Hon'ble Rai Sitanath Ray Bahadur :—“I referred to that only in order to show that Indian members are not at all apathetic to the improvement of sanitation. With these few words I beg to say that I wholeheartedly support the Resolution, especially that part of it which says that provision should be made in the Budget to allot 50 lakhs more for the improvement of water-supply in rural areas.”

The Hon'ble Rai Bahadur Krishna Sahay :—“Sir, I accord 12-33 P.M.
my hearty support to both parts of the Resolution which my friend, Mr. Sarma, has moved. It can hardly be contended that the allotment under the head of sanitation, etc., is at all adequate. At any rate it is not commensurate with the requirements of the Provinces. I believe all Provinces stand in need of larger expenditure under the head of sanitation—particularly for my Province of Bihar and Orissa I find that there is an allotment of Rs. 5,89,000 only for sanitation. If you take into account the vast population of that province, about 34 millions, it will at once appear that the provision made here is grossly inadequate. I find also another curious thing. The allotment under that head as regards another Province, namely, Bombay, with a population of 19 millions only, is 23 lakhs. First of all we have to see whether an allotment of 5 lakhs and odd is sufficient for a population of 34 millions. I submit that it is not.

“It is hardly necessary for me to enter the lists against the remark which has been made, unfortunately, by my friend, Mr. Ironside, as regards the incapacity of the educated people of this country to appreciate the problems of sanitation. I may remind my friend, that so far as my Province is concerned, this question of medical relief, as well as water-supply, has been times without number brought forward not only by the educated classes in the Provincial Council of which at one time both my friend and I were members, but also in the mofussil district boards and municipalities. A perusal of the proceedings of the Council and of the municipalities and district boards will, I am sure, convince my friend that far from being incapable to appreciate problems of sanitation they have studied it, felt the need for a proper solution of the problem and have incessantly turned their minds to a solution of the problem. I think it was an uncalled for remark on the part of Mr. Ironside when he said that the educated classes in the country did not appreciate the problems of sanitation. . . .

The Hon'ble Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjea:—"May I be permitted to make a suggestion, Sir, that this unhappy controversy should be allowed to drop, having regard to the fact that Mr. Ironside has withdrawn the allegation he made against the educated community?"

The Hon'ble Rai Bahadur Krishna Sahay:—"I said, therefore, that it was not necessary to enter the lists, in view of the fact that Mr. Ironside withdrew his remark. But I was just going to convince him that so far as my Province is concerned his remark would not apply. With these words I support the Resolution."

12-36 P.M.

The Hon'ble Rai Bahadur B. D. Shukul:—"Sir, on behalf of the Central Provinces and Berar I rise to submit my emphatic protest against the

The Hon'ble the Vice-President:—"I must call the Hon'ble Member's attention to the fact that the allegation has been withdrawn."

The Hon'ble Rai Bahadur B. D. Shukul:—"Yes, but not against the educated classes, Sir. As coming from the backward parts of the Central Provinces I do assure the Council that the members of the backward municipalities are as keenly interested in the question of adequate water-supply as the members of advanced municipalities like Bombay and Calcutta, and as such I submit that the Hon'ble the Finance Minister will kindly see his way to accept the suggestion made by my Hon'ble friend, Mr. Sarma. In my Budget speech last year I pointed out how the allotment for sanitation was not adequate so far as the Central Provinces were concerned, and I now find to my regret that the situation has not very much improved. With these words I commend the Resolution of my Hon'ble friend, Mr. Sarma, to the acceptance of this Council."

12-37 P.M.

The Hon'ble Khan Bahadur Mian Muhammad Shafi:—"Sir, the Resolution moved by my friend, the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma, has been so thoroughly discussed that I shall content myself with merely saying that I associate myself entirely and whole-heartedly with the object which my friend has in view, and I trust that the Hon'ble the Finance Minister will see his way to accede to the request embodied in this Resolution."

12-38 P.M.

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda:—"Sir, I will follow my friend, the Hon'ble Mr. Shafi's example, in simply associating myself with the Resolution moved by my friend Mr. Sarma. In fact in my remarks yesterday I think I went beyond what he said, and I earnestly hope that the Finance Member will see his way to accept this Resolution."

12-39 P.M.

The Hon'ble Sir James Meston:—"Sir, the Hon'ble Mover in his opening speech said that he had no intention of being either theatrical or sentimental, and in replying to the Resolution I shall endeavour to follow his excellent example. I shall therefore express no sort of resentment against the suggestions that have been made that we, Government officials, do not regret the appalling calamity that has visited us in the course of a few months or that we do not wish to see an enormous development of medical and sanitary work, or that we do not recognise that such medical and sanitary services as are available to rural areas are at present gravely inadequate or in fact generally speaking that we do not think as much as the Hon'ble Member does of the thirst of the people, whether it is.....

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—" May I make an explanation, Sir. I never meant that the Government did not have the people's welfare at heart or did not think of it at all. I simply ask them to think more about it, that they should give their millions to it."

The Hon'ble Sir James Meston:—"I was going to make that clear. The Hon'ble Member's speech was all that could be desired; but some of his followers moved a little further in that direction than I think he did. I do not want to exacerbate this debate in any way whatever. I do want to say that we are fully aware of the deficiencies of the system of sanitation and water-supply. As a Government we are fully aware of what I was going to describe as the thirst of the people, whether it was for pure drinking water in the literal sense or for education in a metaphorical sense. I say nothing further on those points. I have no desire to enter into the merits of the case. I subscribe cordially to the statement that has been made by my Hon'ble friend, Mr. Banerjee, that great energy and great generosity have been displayed by individuals and by large groups of the educated classes in providing water-supply for large towns. The discussion, however, has rather tended to drift away from the precise terms of the Resolution before us which do not apply to large towns, but apply directly and specifically to rural areas. Well, the real fact of the matter is, as the Hon'ble Mover has said and as Mr. Hogg who supported him has emphasised, that this Resolution endeavours to establish a principle. I accept the principle; I gladly accept the principle and in opposing the Resolution I do it purely on technical grounds. I have to oppose the Resolution on technical grounds, and I may say at once that for the same reason, on the same grounds, I shall have to oppose the next Resolution that stands in the Hon'ble Member's name.

"Public health, rural sanitation, primary education all stand on the same footing; and the reasons I have to urge upon the Council to-day for not accepting these specific proposals for large grants to them are the same in each case. There are three or four good reasons to my mind why these Resolutions should not be accepted in the form in which they stand. In the first place, it is, if I may say so, the duty of this Council to insist upon the salutary rule that when an Hon'ble Member rises to propose large additional expenditure, he should say where that expenditure is to come from. The Hon'ble Mover in his speech referred in a general way to various possible sources, and he referred specifically to the Imperial surplus. Well, I ran down the list of proposals that stand in his name and I find the extra grants he asks for come to 3 crores; the Imperial surplus is just a little over one crore; it obviously therefore cannot go round. He does not propose that we should impose extra taxation; the sources from which we are to find this extra grant are vague and indeterminate. I think it would be a beneficial thing to lay upon ourselves a self-denying ordinance that when we put forward proposals for extra grants we should specify clearly where the money is to come from. This is the first ground on which I shall oppose these two Resolutions. The second ground is that they are both opposed to the whole idea of provincial autonomy which now holds the field. We are endeavouring to get Local Governments to develop their own resources and surpluses and not to come cap in hand to the Government of India for assistance whenever they have any deserving proposals to put forward. The Hon'ble Member in that connection is doubtful whether the Local Governments have sufficient freedom to draw on their balances. As to that I can only refer him to the figures. The third ground on which I oppose the Resolution is that the provision of water-supply for rural areas, the development of their own

[Sir James Meston ; Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma ;

[8TH MARCH, 1919.]

Health Departments, the extension of primary education, are all matters for the Local Governments; they have to draw up plans and to lay out programmes, and it will then be for us to consider the grant of assistance if they come and tell us exactly to what extent they wish the Central Government to co-operate. We have no suggestions in the current Budget from any of the Provincial Governments for extra grants. I cannot charge my memory with any single case in which a sanitary scheme or an education scheme has been rejected by the Central Government. The fourth and last reason why I ask the Council not to accept this Resolution in its present form is, that it is reviving the old, the discredited, the dead system of doles. It will be within the memory of a good many of the members of this Council that there was a time when doles were very much in fashion. There was the historic case in which India was revelling in money which accrued from the opium habit of the Chinese. There was a great deal more money than we knew what to do with, and enormous sums were offered to Local Governments for various beneficial purposes. What happened? I can speak from personal experience. At least one Government received a very considerable amount for education, and we had to set to work to prepare schemes for the best employment of these funds. If we had employed them straightaway we should have been involved in recurring expenditure to an extent which our Provincial funds were utterly inadequate to provide. If we employed them, as we ultimately did, very largely on non-recurring expenditure, we required time to mature our schemes to see that we were using the money to the best advantage. These doles were not a blessing in disguise, very much the reverse. I believe that in the balances of Local Governments there are still lying considerable sums, dating from that period which Local Governments have not been able wisely to employ. It is a very easy thing to offer largesses to Local Governments; it is very easy to go and say 'my predecessor has taxed you, my colleague has imposed an unwelcome policy upon you; but here is the Finance Department, or any other department of Government, coming to solace you with money'; in other words, 'Codlin is your friend not Shortt.' That is an easy policy but it is an embarrassing policy, and to my mind an unwise policy. I trust the Government of India will continue to resist temptation of that sort and get the relations between the Central and the Provincial Governments on a healthier and more permanent basis henceforth. I have to oppose the Resolution as it stands, and I shall have to adopt the same attitude as regards the next Resolution, but in view of the strong feeling that has been expressed in this Council, I desire to say that I shall be very glad to consider, in consultation with the Hon'ble Sir Sankaran Nair, who is in charge of these departments, the insertion in the final Budget for next year of whatever sum he considers reasonable for the development of central investigation into influenza or similar epidemics and measures for dealing with occurrences of that sort. Speaking generally, I am prepared to do that, but this does not apply to the suggestion about the improvement of the water-supply in rural areas which is entirely a Provincial matter. I do not know if my Hon'ble friend accepts that as sufficient, or whether he will still press his Resolution."

12-50 P.M.

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma :—"Sir, I have just to make a few observations with regard to the remarks which have fallen from my esteemed friend Mr. Ironside"

The Hon'ble the Vice President :—"If the Hon'ble Member is going to refer to what has been withdrawn then he is out of order."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma :—"I am not going to speak of what was said of the educated classes, but certain remarks fell from the Hon'ble Member with reference to myself and the proposition I advanced."

[8TH MARCH, 1919.]

[Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma.]

If he does not desire to press the point against me, I have no desire to indulge in any controversy, but if these remarks stand against me then it is my duty to reply to them.

"Sir, the Hon'ble Member has alluded to certain positions which I have taken up with reference to this debate and to financial questions in general; and has made a grave indictment against me. Speaking personally about my own position I have been accustomed to these attacks for the last thirteen years in the Legislative Councils with one break, and my reputation can be allowed to take care of itself. But my Hon'ble friend has dragged the dear name of the presidency to which I belong into question, and I must protest in the most emphatic terms against the suggestion that the Province has suffered cruelly at my hands.

"Well, Sir, in view of the support which I have received from the representative of the Bombay commercial community and the sympathetic remarks from the Hon'ble the Finance Member and of all my non-official colleagues, I do not think those remarks require any refutation whatsoever in detail. But when he made those remarks I literally trembled in my shoes as to whether he was going to follow up those vague charges with any substantial reasons, or whether he was going to indulge in them simply because that he was angry because I have suggested certain retrenchments possibly in other directions which hurt the interests he advocates. I may be permitted to say, Sir, that his remarks, though they show a general lip sympathy for the object which all of us have at heart, are, if construed rightly, a libel on the European commercial community, because he brings in the question of immediate financial returns when I ask for expenditure on sanitation and on the equipment of the Health Department. I do not think the mercantile world, the Indian mercantile world among whom some of the best intellects, cultured intellects, find a place, would deal with a proposition of this description in the manner in which the Hon'ble Mr. Ironside proposes to deal with it.

"I said, Sir, that I wanted an acceptance of the principle that we should look upon the Health Department as a national insurance department. He has not one word to say by way of argument against it. Is my proposition of such a stupid, fallacious character as to deserve that condemnation from him?

"Then I asked for Rs. 50 lakhs. For what object? For the equipment of the Department of Health. I suppose it is a monstrous financial proposition, a gross fallacy, that I have advocated in this Council wasting the time of this Council which does not appeal to my Hon'ble friend.

"And what is the third object? I asked for Rs. 50 lakhs for rural water-supply, and he brings in the question of the educated classes. Wherein is there any connection between the educated classes and rural areas, I wonder? And I was asking chiefly for the funds for wells and other objects in which educated classes would not take any part at all, and in which the machinery of the Government, largely official, would take part, and therefore was there any fallacy in my argument even there? I fail to see any unless I am told wherein it lies.

"Then, Sir, the Hon'ble Mr. Ironside says the general objects to which I alluded are economically unsound financial propositions. Now what did I ask for? I simply said that the general Exchequer would have to find funds to adopt ways and means to meet this pressing situation, whatever may be the nature of the other difficulties with which we are confronted, even at the expense of risking a certain amount of diminishing expenditure under the favourite head 'Railways.' Most certainly in the Hon'ble Member's estimate Railways are better than the lives of His Majesty's Indian subjects! That is a new proposition that has been expounded to us here to-day.

"Well, Sir, I stand unconvinced by any of the arguments.

"Then with reference to the remarks of the Hon'ble Sir James Meston, I cordially appreciate the position that he takes. But, Sir, I have not asked for any interference with provincial autonomy. I have simply pointed out that if the spirit of the Reform proposals be carried out, then obviously this money that I am asking for would not be really the money of the Imperial Department which they would be doling out to Provincial Governments, but money of the Provincial Governments, money which is legitimately and rightfully their own. Therefore, the question of interference with provincial autonomy, that impolicy of doles, does not, I submit respectfully, come in here.

[Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma ; Mr. Malcolm Hogg ; [8TH MARCH, 1919.]

"Then, Sir, I am asked whether I have suggested additional taxation or addition to the resources. The rules of course prohibit me, they prohibit any non-official Member from raising any questions of taxation, and therefore that cannot be flung in my face, but I have suggested increased customs on beer, etc. But having regard to what he has said and to his decision, if possible, to find money if the Sanitary Department wants it, I do not think any useful object would be served by my pressing this Resolution on the further attention of this Council, and I therefore withdraw it."

12-58 P.M.

The Hon'ble Mr. Malcolm Hogg :—" Sir, I would like to [make a personal explanation. The Hon'ble Mover has referred to the support which I gave him on this Resolution. I just wish to make it clear that my support was limited to the general principle of allotting more money for medical relief, and did not necessarily extend to the methods by which my Hon'ble friend proposed to provide it."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma :—" I did not understand it."

The Hon'ble the Vice-President :—" I understand the Hon'ble Member desires to withdraw the Resolution with the leave of the Council ? "

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma :—" Yes, Sir."

The Resolution was, by leave of the Council, withdrawn.

RESOLUTION RE EXTENSION AND IMPROVEMENT OF PRIMARY EDUCATION.

1 P.M.

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma :—" The next Resolution, Sir, that I have the honour to move is—

'This Council recommends to the Governor General in Council that the expenditure under education be increased by Rs. 150 lakhs to provide for the extension and improvement of primary education.'

"I shall not take up the time of the Council very much on this question. This is a hardy annual as was put last year by one of the Hon'ble Member, and it is unnecessary to ask this Council to accept the principle of extension of primary education. My object, Sir, in bringing forward the Resolution this year is of a two-fold character.

"The first is that this year and as early as possible we should recognise that the Provincial Governments should be given funds for the immediate development of primary education in the Provinces. My object is to draw the attention of the Council to the fact that this question cannot be indefinitely postponed, that we should not be satisfied with mere paper Acts passed in the various Legislative Councils about compulsory primary education; that we should not labour under any delusions that the progress is going to be rapid if we are to be satisfied with the acceptance of the principle. Time was when the Government fought even the question of principle, but we seem to think that inasmuch as the Government have accepted the principle, we have gained 90 per cent. of the goal, that we are within measurable reach of victory, that our ideal will be realised in practice, that the Local Governments by passing paper Acts will be able to extend primary education. I want the Legislative Council clearly to realise that, in spite of the Act which my Hon'ble friend Mr. Patel had the honour of introducing and getting passed in the Bombay Council and similar Acts passed elsewhere, not much seems to have been done because the sinews of war have not been provided; there is no finance to back up the proposals. Now you will say 'this is going to be left to the people hereafter under the proposals for reform'—therefore why worry us now about it? Accept that principle if you please, but give us the money which is really the Provincial Governments' money. I will not deal with this matter at length, because I have dealt with it already and I have shown that if the Provincial Governments get their own revenues there would be more than 200 lakhs to their credit out of which they could meet this 150 lakhs. Be consistent, give them that, otherwise I ask you to accept the responsibility of the Imperial Council to provide funds from out of the general Exchequer this year. What after all am I asking for? Hon'ble Members will realise that we have during the last five years increased the total revenues of the country from £83 to £123 millions, or there has been an increase of £40 millions; in other words, Rs. 60 crores. I know that about Rs. 261 lakhs net have been added for education, that means about 4 per cent. I ask you to add 150 lakhs more, which would work out at 6 per cent. of the whole increase of revenues that I am asking to be devoted to education on which everybody is agreed the future salvation of India depends. Is that an excessive proportion? Is that a large sum? Am I to be told the Army wants this, the Railways want that, a third administration wants money, therefore we cannot provide for the prime necessities of education? I ask Hon'ble Members to see what is being done in other countries; people elsewhere are not satisfied with mere talk such as is indulged in here; they have been formulating proposals as to how even primary education should be supplemented by education up to the age of 16 and 18, how extension classes should reach everybody, how even University education should be within the reach of all deserving youths. That is the way they are proceeding about their task in order to equip the people of their countries with facilities to meet the growing competition of the world; to make the men and women worthy of their lives. But what are we doing? We are in an anti-diluvian era, thinking that every proposition is financially unsound, is economically unripe, and that a poor country cannot solve this question. I ask, Sir, that the Council should rise to the height of the occasion and should have this money. I am not asking for doles, I am not asking for provincial autonomy being interfered with, I want restoration of the old policy, that during the transition stage about 2·5 per cent. be given out of the increase of revenue during the last five years."

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya:—"Mr. Vice-1-5 P.M. President, I heartily support the proposal which has been put before the Council. In doing so I will only add this much that if the Hon'ble the Finance Member cannot find the money in other ways, I should go the length of suggesting that this money should be provided out of the loan which it is proposed to take for the purpose of expenditure on railways, that to that extent the amount to be provided for railways should be reduced and the money should be set apart for education. I venture to think that if we will remember the history of the question of primary education in this Council and the Provinces, my suggestion would not seem to be altogether a wild one. Ordinarily the money needed for primary education should be found from ordinary revenues, but we find that adequate sums are not provided for it out of the ordinary revenue; but the purpose of providing primary education for the people ranks in importance not lower than any other question. And if the Government, after making a strenuous and earnest effort to find the money out of the revenues to an adequate extent for this purpose, find themselves unable to do so, then I say that rather than delay progress by one year, they should borrow the money for one year and provide it for education, partly for non-recurring expenditure in the shape of buildings, partly for the creation of normal schools, and also to meet partly the expenditure of ordinary schools for the year, and then make a strenuous effort in the next year to find the money out of revenue. If they should not be able to do that, then I should say they should go on borrowing for a few years, i.e., until they are able to find the necessary money out of revenue rather than allow the extension of primary education to be delayed year after year. We have expenditure found for building Delhi, we have money found for increasing military expenditure up to the extent asked for by the military authorities of the day. We have an immense sum found for expending it on railways. It is time we should find sufficient money for education. I know a certain sum has been spent on primary education; we recognise that a certain amount is being spent on it, but that amount is not adequate to the needs of the situation, and this question of primary education is of greater importance from every possible point of view than any other question. For these reasons I suggest that the Finance Department should find the money asked for by Mr. Sarma out of revenues by cutting down expenditure in other directions, which I cannot suggest, but which the Department themselves are in a better position to find out; and if they cannot do so, then they should provide the amount out of borrowed money to the extent that has been suggested. I strongly urge that for the sake of humanity, do not let the progress of education be delayed any longer. The work that has been done is appreciated, but that is very small compared to what is needed, and I ask Government to find the money somehow, either out of revenues, or by borrowing, to push on the progress of this very beneficent reform which lies at the root of all other reforms so far as the welfare of the people is concerned."

1-8 P.M.

The Hon'ble Sir James Meston :—"Sir, the Hon'ble Member has been brief in opening his proposal, and again I shall follow his example. I have indeed very little to add to what I said in reply to the last Resolution. I am still in a state of considerable uncertainty as to the Hon'ble Member's financial intentions. He assures me that he does not want doles, and if the Resolution in the form in which it stands does not mean doles, I am unable to attach any other interpretation to it. The Hon'ble Member said that there was a time when Government was opposed to the principle, I take it the principle of the extension of primary education. I do not remember that time . . .

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma :—"Compulsory education."

The Hon'ble Sir James Meston :—"That is another question. My friend the Hon'ble Pandit Malaviya has advised us that we should borrow this million sterling for the purposes of education. I think it is quite conceivable that in the near future we may have to borrow for capital purposes such as the Hon'ble Pandit mentions, the erection of new buildings, normal schools, training institutions and so on, but I would point out that to borrow £1 million this year is certainly not going to provide the pivot of the system, the trained teacher. If I understand anything about primary education, it is that the whole success in the future depends on the provision of trained teachers, men who are able to come forward and occupy the schools that we build and take over the classes which are now being in many cases somewhat inadequately taught, men who have a thorough appreciation of the science of education and who are prepared to undertake the profession of education in the necessary missionary spirit. So that if my Hon'ble friend with his proposal for Rs. 150 lakhs, could take me with him to a shop where this product is turned out ready-made for immediate use, I should gladly provide the Rs. 150 lakhs. If he would give me 15,000 teachers for Rs. 1,000 each, I should take them and pay the money down; or even 1,500 teachers at Rs. 10,000 each, I should take them and pay the money down. But I am afraid the product is not available, and so the money could not be spent, and I must oppose the Resolution."

1-11 P.M.

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma :—"Just one word, Sir. I listened with some surprise to the last argument that has been advanced by the Hon'ble the Finance Minister. It is an argument that has been advanced for the last ten years, I think, by almost every Finance Minister, both in the Provinces and in the Government of India. When is that psychological moment to arrive when the Government is going to start schools and prepare these teachers. Are we to be told year after year that that millenium must arrive, and until that millenium arrives nothing will be done. We are arguing in a vicious circle. What my friend the Hon'ble Pandit Malaviya said was, if the money cannot be spent in a hasty way in equipping teachers for primary schools, use the money for starting normal schools, for building purposes and for a thousand other purposes, for which I think, estimates are being prepared during the last ten years in the Education Department. You want crores of rupees in the shape of non-recurring expenditure. You want crores of rupees in the shape of recurring expenditure ; and to be told that the Education Department cannot find use for these 150 lakhs is, I think, to be told what it is rather difficult to believe. I think there is not much strength in that part of the argument.

[8TH MARCH, 1919.]

" Then the Hon'ble Member says it is a question of doles really. Of course it will be a question of doles so long as the ancient system of finances as between the Imperial and the Provincial Governments continues. I believe that it has been discarded. But so long as it is in force, the ancient practice of finding something even in the most difficult years for these essential departments, Education, Sanitation, etc., should not be departed from and some money should be found. Precedent is in my favour. Whether you look upon it as a dole or as the Provinces getting back what is recognised to be their own, is not essential, so long as the money is forthcoming. I hope the Hon'ble the Finance Minister, though he may not be able to accept the Resolution, will change his mind and before the 21st find some money for the improvement of this essential branch of Indian administration."

The Resolution was put and the Council divided as follows :—

Ayes—18.	Noes—32.

[8TH MARCH, 1919.]

RESOLUTION RE GRANT TO ASSAM COLLEGE.

2-33 P.M.

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda :—"Sir,—I beg to move the following resolution :—

'This Council recommends to the Governor General in Council that the grant to the Assam Government be increased by a non-recurring grant of Rs. 11 lakhs and a recurring grant of Rs. 1 lakh for the Murarichand College at Sylhet.'

"Sir, in the first place I think I owe an explanation to the Council for bringing up an apparently local matter before this Council, so that there may be no prejudice against it on that score. I ought to assure the Council at once that I do not come here over the head of my Government. I am not an appellant against its decision, rather I am in the position of a co-plaintiff with the Local Government against the Government of India. The facts are these :—We had a private second grade college called the Murarichand College established and maintained by the premier zemindar of the district, the late Raja Girischandra Roy. It was a very efficient and successful institution. Its boys on more than one occasion secured the highest places in the University. During the swadeshi agitation the Government of Eastern Bengal and Assam decided to have control of the educational institutions, and negotiations were opened with the proprietor of the college to hand over charge of the college. A part of the contract was that it was to be raised to a fully equipped first grade college. The sanction of the Secretary of State was obtained for it, but in the meantime the Government of Eastern Bengal and Assam became defunct, and the Assam Administration was formed, and the Surma Valley districts of Sylhet and Cachar, I may say in passing, in the teeth of our opposition, were attached to Assam. However, it now devolved upon the Assam Government to provincialise the college and it was done while my Hon'ble friend sitting on my right was then Chief Secretary of the Assam Administration. The question of raising its status to the B. A. standard was then taken up. Some time was spent in a dispute regarding the site to be located, and after calling several conferences the Chief Commissioner, Sir Archdale Earle, visited Sylhet, and after consulting local opinion selected a site, and land was acquired by Government. But then unfortunately the war broke out and all work had to be stopped. But our boys then were in a fix. Although Bengalees, they were strangers in Bengal and could not find admission in Bengal because they were in Assam, and although they were in Assam they were strangers because they were Bengalees and not Assamese and could not find admission in the Assam College at Gauhati, and hundreds of boys were turned out, and the difficulty was to obtain accommodation for them in any college, and parents were not anxious to send them to Calcutta for various reasons and some of them were not able to afford it either.

"In this state of things the Chief Commissioner, Sir Archdale Earle, visited Sylhet in the cold weather of 1916, and we waited on him in deputation and placed our grievances before him. He fully went into the matter and was satisfied about the justice of our claim. But he observed that owing to the war funds would not be forthcoming for some time. If we agreed to pay a portion of the cost, about half, that would be required for the kutchha buildings to open B. A. classes and part of the cost of the staff for a year, he thought that matters might be expedited, and the local public agreed to these terms, and nine of the leading men of the town gave an agreement in writing to pay the sum of Rs. 18,000 which was estimated by Government. We now thought that the whole thing was all right and that the college would be sanctioned in no time, and we were directed to make our application for affiliation up to B. A. degree of the University. This was done, and I believe the Chief Commissioner addressed the Government of India, but apparently the Government of India was not anxious to pay any heed to it, and the University in its turn informed us that owing to a recent ruling of the Government of India, our application for affiliation was out of time.

[Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda.]

"During the Budget debate of the Assam Council in March 1916,—I was then a member of the Assam Council,—we mentioned this matter and the Chief Commissioner invited some of us who were interested in the college to meet him. It was then decided that I should come up to Simla to place our case personally before the Education Member. Accordingly, armed with a letter of authority from the Chief Commissioner, I came in April 1916 and interviewed my Hon'ble friend Sir Sankaran Nair and Sir Edward MacLagan. I believe my Hon'ble friend Mr. Sharp was then in Kashmir. I gratefully acknowledge that both my Hon'ble friends Sir Sankaran Nair and Sir Edward MacLagan were pleased to take a favourable view of the application, and removed the bar which stood in the way of the University to consider our application for affiliation. With that decision I went down to Calcutta, and approached the Syndicate. They then granted affiliation of the B. A. classes in Pass, and the classes were opened in kutchha buildings for which we paid the cost. In a short time the enrolment was exceeded by more than double of what was estimated, and the result of the University Examination was more than gratifying. We now found that the college was flocked by hundreds of boys, but we had no accommodation and the staff was insufficient, and the affiliation was inadequate being confined to a Pass. We, therefore, approached the Government to place the college on a proper footing in accordance with the undertaking that was given to us, and the Assam Government pressed the matter to the notice of the Government of India. But the Government of India was unmoved and raised all sorts of difficulties. They objected to the site selected by the Chief Commissioner himself. They objected to give more money, and the University refused to grant affiliation in Honours until the defects were removed, until all the conditions were fulfilled, and I do not think that the University could do anything else. I am sure I could not support the application under the circumstances from my place in the Senate. So the college was confined to Pass course, and classes were held in kutchha buildings and the staff remained inadequate. After that we had to accept the suggestion of the Government of India and abandon the old site and selected a new site. But where is the money to come from? The Hon'ble Sir James Meston told us yesterday that the Assam Government had 31 lakhs at its disposal, but the Assam Government cannot pay for a single project out of this sum. Nor can it finance a first grade college without a grant from the Government. I, therefore, appeal to the Hon'ble the Finance Minister to give us this money. We have done everything we had to do. Every condition that had to be fulfilled by us has been fulfilled, and it is the Government of India which has to fulfil its part. I am sure if it was a private party we could sue him for a breach of contract, but of course we cannot sue the Government of India for breach of faith. Apart from this you took the college from us on the understanding that you would maintain a fully equipped first grade college to teach up to the B. A. standard. You took Rs. 18,000 from us on the understanding that after a year the college would be placed on a permanent footing. We have selected the site which you insisted on, and what more can we do? You must give us the money now. Apart from any breach of contract, there is a moral duty which the Government owes to Assam as we have been separated from Bengal. When we were attached to Assam we protested, but then we were told that we would be granted all these things in Assam. When we waited in deputation on the Chief Secretary to the Government of Eastern Bengal, Mr. P. C. Lyon, he told me 'why do you wish to be in Bengal: in Bengal you will be the tail end. But you will be the premier district in Assam.' Where are we now?

"I must therefore ask you, Sir, to let us have the money to place the college on a permanent footing. I have reasons to believe that my official colleague sitting on my right will, if appealed to, support my case. It may be he may not support every remark I make against the Government, but I am sure so far as the prayer for the college is concerned, he will give it his support, and I trust the Council will be pleased to accept this Resolution."

2-45 P.M.

The Hon'ble Mr. Reid:—Sir, as the Commissioner of the Division in which the college is situated, my sympathies are entirely with the Hon'ble Mr. Chanda. But we must remember that he appears as a co-plaintiff for the Government of Assam. I do not think I can support him. I have no instructions on the subject from my Commission. I do not know that he would consider it as a most immediately necessary for Assam. I am quite sure that we have not asked for any additional grant whatsoever for any purpose whatsoever he would gladly accept it. That, however, is a different matter.

“The Hon'ble Mr. Chanda has stated the case on the whole accurately, although I cannot endorse a few of his remarks. It is, perhaps, not quite relevant to the discussion, but it is not in accordance with facts to say that the districts of Sylhet and Cachar were taken away from Bengal in 1912. These districts have formed part of the Chief Commissionership of Assam since its creation. During the brief period that the province of Eastern Bengal and Assam was in existence, they formed part of that Province, and in 1912 they came back to Assam.

“Then the Hon'ble Mr. Chanda says that he has a grievance against Government for breach of contract. At first I was not sure whether it was against the Local Government or the Government of India that he had a grievance for breach of contract. He has now made it clear that his grievance was against the more august body. I am not sufficiently familiar with the negotiations that took place when the Murarichand College at Sylhet was handed over to Government to state the precise terms of the agreement. One material fact is a comparison of the number of students at that time with the number of students at the present time. It has increased manifold. In so far as Mr. Chanda argues that the college is an urgent need of the Surma Valley, in so far as he says that there is not enough accommodation for the young men who wish to go to college, in so far as he says that they are not welcome in Gauhati, he is perfectly correct. But whether on these facts a claim can be made for what is apparently the whole of the initial and recurring expenditure on account of this college, is a matter which it is not for me to decide.”

2-48 P.M.

The Hon'ble Sir James Meston:—“Sir, I am not a sufficient lawyer to say whether the withdrawal of a co-plaintiff in a suit means that the suit falls to the ground. Probably it does not, and unfortunately I could not catch a good many of the arguments that were placed with fluency and eloquence before us by the original plaintiff. The Hon'ble Mover, however, has probably achieved his purpose in demonstrating to the world his affection and enthusiasm for this scheme, and personally I am quite prepared to accept his statement of the merits of the Murarichand College, supported as it has been by the Hon'ble Mr. Reid. On the Resolution, Sir, I am afraid there is nothing for me to do except to offer my unfortunate usual opposition. I find that a very short time ago when the scheme was officially before the Government in the Education Department, the local administration was told that the expenditure would fall on the Provincial revenues. That is still the situation, and it is not in my power, especially as there has been no suggestion to that effect from the Local Government, to impose doles upon them for the purpose. I must, therefore, oppose the Resolution.”

2-50 P.M.

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda:—“Sir, after the decision of the Hon'ble the Finance Minister I do not think it is very useful to go on with the discussion and take up the time of the Council. I think, therefore, I must withdraw this Resolution.”

The Resolution was, by leave of the Council, withdrawn.

[8TH MARCH, 1919.]

[Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma.]

RESOLUTION RE INCREASE OF BUDGET ALLOTMENT FOR CARRYING OUT THE RECOMMENDATIONS OF THE INDUSTRIAL COMMISSION.

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma. beg to move the next Resolution that stands in my name.

' That this Council recommends to the Government in Council the allotment of Rs. 50 lakhs for carrying out the recommendations of the Industrial Commission.

" We had a very sympathetic reply yesterday to some remarks which fell from Hon'ble Members on this question during the last stage of the debate. The question, therefore, stands thus, that the Finance Minister will be pleased to consider during the course of the year favourably any need that there may be felt for giving effect to the recommendations of the Industrial Commission. The objection to any grant at the present moment seems to be that the recommendations of the Industrial Commission have not been finally approved by the Government in any practicable form, and therefore for Budget purposes, it is a trifle premature to allot any funds. Sir, I respectfully submit that reasons, and very cogent reasons, may be urged for a way out of the situation which has been presented by the Hon'ble the Finance Member. Now, it is absolutely necessary to waste the time of the Council in urging the imperative importance of giving immediate effect to the recommendations of the Industrial Commission. We are not at the stage now to discuss the merits of definite proposals, but, I think, everybody is agreed that we must set in practical motion the machinery for enabling the industrial advancement to keep pace with the times without any appreciable or undue delay. Now the real point is as to whether amongst these various recommendations of the Industrial Commission involving an expenditure of 25 lakhs of rupees (Rs. 24,63,000) Imperial and about Rs. 98 lakhs Provincial, or an aggregate recurring expenditure of 123 lakhs, there are not schemes to which effect can be given as having been universally consented to, immediately and during the course of this year. Besides items of recurring expenditure the Committee recommended the expenditure of 150 lakhs of rupees on certain schemes towards the capital expenditure that may be involved, and another 66 lakhs was foreshadowed as being possible expenditure on schemes that may be approved. Now the point is as to whether, amongst these numerous objects, the Government of India cannot find some objects at least which are universally acknowledged to be the right objects upon which immediate attention should be riveted and to which money should be devoted. Of course, there may be differences amongst Provincial Governments as to whether the control by the Imperial Government should be rigorous or should be merely of an advisory character, as to whether greater latitude should be given to the Provinces in the development of their own industries, or the whole should be controlled by an Imperial Department. On this there may be some difference of opinion, but even that, I submit, should be settled during the course of the year and before long. I think we have had this wrangle for the last 30 years, really. I have been reading this literature on industrial development for the last 30 years, and have seen the Resolution of the Government of India expressing its hearty sympathy with the objects and proposing schemes and asking that something should be done. The time has now come when practical effect should be given to the schemes and we should not any longer delay. I need hardly allude to what is going on in other countries, and the practical effect which is being given and which was given even during the course of the war to various schemes of national importance. Therefore, Sir, I submit that provision should be made to some extent because we are sure to have some Imperial Department. What the relations of that Department to the local department may be is another matter, and there will be some subjects within the control of that Department.

[Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma; Sir Fazulbhoy Currimbhoy] [8TH MARCH, 1919.]

Similarly, with regard to the incurring expenditure we shall hope to construct technological schemes, etc., and money could be employed on them. Therefore, I do not think any valid reason can be urged in favour of a policy of doing nothing during the current year on the part of the Governments are not ready with the formulation of their policy. I think I need say more. Local Governments I know are giving a greater impetus by the special officer appointed by the Government. I think we must thank the Government for the manner in which they are trying to meet the solution of this question, but I submit the plan must be given some shape during the course of the year, and I think state expenditure must be allotted during the course of the year in order to throw the onus of proving that the machinery cannot be set on foot upon the Government of India and the Local Governments. I put it as a secondary reason. The first reason, I urge, is that amongst these new schemes there are various schemes which are ready and ripe for expenditure. I put it as a secondary ground that the need of proving that the money cannot be spent should be upon the Imperial and the Provincial Governments. I think that will give a greater impetus to the carrying out of proposals all of us have at heart than merely saying, 'if the Department ask, we will give it.' The Department may not ask out of courtesy to the Government of India, or out of courtesy to the Provincial Government. I think the whip hand must be taken with more vigour. There are such things as lapses in Provincial expenditure and Imperial expenditure, and I do not think therefore, we need be so very sorry after all if there be any lapse of money provided for this purpose, and there will not be much in any case because the money I am asking for is so infinitesimally small in amount when compared with the needs and the proposals of the departments. I have only to say that the expenditure during the last five years under Imperial has grown by three lakhs only, from 39.13 to 42.21 Imperial, and the total expenditure has grown only by 33 lakhs, 93 being the expenditure as against 60. Surely that is a very small item having regard to the needs of the subject. I therefore, submit that the Finance Member will kindly see his way not to oppose this Resolution."

The Hon'ble Sir Fazulbhoy Currimbhoy:—"Sir, I am in entire sympathy with the object my friend has in view. I must say that for the last two or three years the Government have been very active with regard to the promoting of industries in the country. An Industrial Commission was appointed, and I had the honour to be one of the members, and we submitted our report last November. The Government were very anxious that we should make our report earlier, but unfortunately we were unable to do so owing to certain reasons. But the Government as soon as they got the report, have specially appointed, as my friend said, an officer, Mr. Low, who has been travelling in every Province and taking the opinions of the different Governments. If my friend Mr. Sarma had carefully read the report of the Commission he would have seen that there are many matters on which the Government of India have to consult the Local Governments, such as how they divide the different departments of industry, and whether an Imperial department of Industry is to be established. These are questions which the Government of India cannot undertake unless they consult the Local Governments. Sir, the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma also mentioned that there were institutions such as technological colleges which should be established, but that also is a question on which the Government of India must consult local opinion. He has himself admitted that the Hon'ble the Finance Member in reply to the Budget speeches made here has distinctly told us that he will be able to give the money if it is wanted by the Member for Commerce. I think under these circumstances when the Government are alive to the situation, he should withdraw this Resolution. I can assure the Hon'ble Member that the Government are very keen and they will do as much as they can in the way of adopting the recommendations of the Commission. With these few words, I will ask my friend to withdraw his Resolution."

[8TH MARCH, 1919.]

Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya.*]

The Hon'ble Mr. Malcolm Hogg (provisionally) not think it is 3 P.M. necessary for me to say more than a sentence of opinion on this Resolution. My real difficulty is in understanding exactly what this Resolution means in Mr. Sarma's mind. Does he think that the Hon'ble Member for Commerce and Industry has been unable to prevail upon the hard-headed Finance Member to give him the funds he requires? Or does he think that the Hon'ble Member for Commerce and Industry, who is himself the President of the Industries Commission, has been so lacking in energy and enthusiasm as not to have asked for necessary funds? One or other of these hypotheses is necessary for the support of this Resolution. I find equal difficulty in accepting either."

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya :—"Sir, 3-1 P.M.
I am quite prepared to answer my Hon'ble friend Mr. Hogg's question. The Hon'ble Mr. Sarma's Resolution does not imply any reflection on the Hon'ble Member for Commerce and Industry on the score of want of a desire to push forward the recommendations of the Commission. Nor does it imply any insinuation of unwillingness on the part of Government to recognise the need of expenditure in that direction. The Hon'ble Mr. Sarma has himself referred to what the Hon'ble the Finance Member said yesterday and appreciated the fact that the Government has said that when the schemes have matured the Finance Department will find money for them. But I agree with the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma that there is a need for providing a large amount in the Budget for the purpose for which he asks for it, and I will give my reasons for it. No doubt the Local Governments have to be consulted about various important proposals which have been made by the Commission; but there are certain proposals about which we might presume that there is an agreement in principle between the Provincial Governments and the Government of India, and provision for carrying out those proposals requires a very large amount to be set aside. I will draw attention here to only a few of these important recommendations. For instance, there are to be two Departments of Industries, an Imperial and a Provincial Department. The Imperial Department is to cost 24 lakhs, and the Provincial Departments are to cost 98 lakhs. Now, let us assume for a moment that there is a difference of opinion—as no doubt there is—about the creation of an Imperial Department of Industries; but about the need of a Provincial Department of Industries there can be no difference. Both the Provincial Governments and the Government of India are likely to agree that a Department of Industries must be established in the Provinces. Departments of Industries already exist in most Provinces, and a development in that direction is bound to take place.

"Then let us take a few other items. Among the schemes recommended for capital expenditure you will find a proposal for providing industrial schools, and the amount of 55 lakhs is recommended for this purpose. Take again, technological institutes. A tabular statement in the Report shows the amount which the Commission think ought to be provided in each Province for technological institutes, viz.,—

	Lakhs.
Bombay	5
Bengal	10
United Provinces	6
Madras	5
Bihar and Orissa	13

making a total of 47 lakhs for technological institutes. There is likely to be very little difference of opinion about the need of these institutes; the Provincial Governments and the Government of India are not likely to disagree about it.

"The fact that we take the training of mechanical engineers, upon which the Commission has laid very great stress. For the technical training of mechanical engineers, the report recommends 10 schools at a capital charge of 40 lakhs. Now confining ourselves to these few items alone, the technical training of mechanical engineers, the training of biological institutes, and the industrial schools, all this is expenditure which has to be incurred in the Provinces, and it seems to me that the Government of India should make a large financial allowance for differences of opinion between the Government of India, regarding the rate of expenditure, and the extent of the undertakings to be started, we may clearly say that a crore cannot be a pie too much to be set aside to carry out the recommendations of the Industries Commission, about which there will be general agreement. It is important that this provision should be made. The general promise made by the Hon'ble the Finance Minister that when the scheme matures he will find money for them is not sufficient in a case like this. The need for expenditure is great and insistent, and we have lost much precious time. We should not lose any more time. We should therefore urge upon the Hon'ble the Finance Member and the Government of India to make a clear provision of at least a crore of rupees for expenditure on those items among the recommendations of the Industries Commission about which we may fairly expect to be in general agreement. If such provision is made, it will be recognised that there is a determination to push things on and that things shall be pushed on. If it is left merely to the general contingency of the recommendations maturing and money being then found for them, I apprehend with all respect to the Hon'ble the Finance Member, that satisfactory progress will not be made this year. We should note what Japan has done and is doing. During the years of the War Japan has stolen a march over us. Last year the value of Japanese imports into this country amounted to 52 crores. The United States of America also have been pouring in their imports into our country. It was high time that India also moved forward in the right direction. There are numerous schemes waiting to be taken up. Those schemes will bring money not only to the people, but also to the Government, but unless you provide money for encouraging private effort, and unless you tell Local Governments that you are ready to help them in pushing those schemes, you will lose another year which will be very greatly injurious to the cause of industrial development. I therefore urge with all the emphasis that I can command that the Resolution, which asks only for a modest sum, a sum which is not at all adequate to the needs of the situation, ought to be accepted and that the Government should provide the sum in the Budget."

3-8 P. M.

The Hon'ble Sir Thomas Holland:—"Sir, it is possible that Hon'ble Members may regard my action in recommending the rejection of this Resolution as not wholly consistent with my position as President of the Industrial Commission. Nevertheless, reconciliation of my two points of view does not necessitate the linguistic dexterity with which my Hon'ble friends, Messrs. Ironside and Hogg, during the debate on the Excess Profits Tax, advocated the interests of their constituents against their own personal convictions.

"Being one of the authors of the recommendations which the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma presses on the attention of Government, my parental instincts naturally respond sympathetically to the spirit of the Resolution. But I am none the less anxious for our offspring to reach the light under favourable and healthy conditions of birth; and I am consequently constrained to oppose any action that might result in premature parturition. It is for this reason, and this reason only, that the Government think it would be unnecessary, and even unwise, to make a separate allotment, of the dimensions suggested, for expenditure during the coming financial year.

"The Hon'ble Sir James Meston told the Council yesterday that Government had been by no means dilatory in dealing with the recommendations &c."

[Sir Thomas F. Holland.]

the Commission. The Report did not reach the Government of India until late in October. It was placed under discussion in all Departments at once; and early in December, the Government of India laid it before the Local Governments the issues which concerned them, and invited their views on the questions that affect the Central Government were forwarded to the Secretary of State. So much for the steps taken of Government of India to deal with those recommendations of the Commission which affect the affairs of the Government of India.

"Now if the Hon'ble Mover will read the Report, he will realise that the majority of our recommendations deal with questions in which Local Governments are responsible; for in spite of impressions that seem to have gained currency, our intention was to show that to use a loose phrase that has lately got into general use—industries for which is essentially a provincial subject. Not only do most of our recommendations deal with questions about which Local Governments must take the initiative, but many of the small remainder deal with matters about which Local Governments must be consulted before the Government of India can reach the stage of spending large sums of money with economic advantage.

"Those who support this Resolution also forget that, whilst there is no special allotment, distinctly marked as such, for the objects of the Industrial Commission, many of the proposals that we have made or supported are being taken up already under other heads. They are scattered throughout the Budget according to the old classification of heads.

"I will draw your attention to one or two illustrations only. The Commission drew attention to the importance of the tanning industry and the necessity of investigating natural tanstuffs. In November last, Government secured the services of a distinguished expert for one year in order to survey the situation, and to advise us as to whether, and in what ways, our amateur efforts required reform.

"The industry, as you know, made great progress during the war, and some 600 tanneries, working on rigidly uniform lines and with fixed prices, turned out Army leather in a way which earned the warm commendation and thanks of the War Office. I was only too anxious to secure this industry as a permanent source of wealth, and what is equally important to preserve the standard of quality which had been attained under conditions of education that cannot be imitated by any University.

"To supplement the work of the tanner, and to give him the advantage of the raw materials now lying idle in our jungles, research work was carried out on a commercial scale, and our results are now being published in a convenient form for the use of the trade.

"Last summer we had some anxiety about the supply of Army boots; and, after inquiry at home, the India Office secured the services of Sir Henry Ledgard, who consented to come out without remuneration to help us in the organisation of this industry. Before Sir Henry arrived, the war was over; but he has now consented to remain for a year without salary in order to give us the benefit of the lessons learnt about Army boots at home, and to advise manufacturers as to how their methods might be improved to meet that demand for European boots which seems to increase as one of the visible signs of modern education. I should like to take this opportunity of expressing the Government's appreciation of Sir Henry Ledgard's public spirited action, which is really due to the spirit which dominates many healthy and successful men—an irresistible desire to see a job done well.

"My Hon'ble Colleague in charge of Revenue and Agriculture worries me at intervals regarding his proposals for extending the research facilities, and his plans for training Indian forest officers, at Dehra Dun. He will tell the Council later what is being done to utilise forest products for industries. Satisfactory results are being obtained in our efforts to extend the use of Indian timbers, large quantities of which have been sent to Egypt, Salonika, Palestine and Mesopotamia.

[Sir Thomas Holland.]

"A special survey of a special situation has been arranged and Mr. Traill has been employed by the Institution of Mining Engineers to advise Government to the necessity of improving our methods of mining and using coal, in view of our limited resources in mineral fuel may be more economically. This is the Government reply to our demand for a survey of waste :

Bangalore, that the Government has for some time at the Indian Institute of Science, account by the distillation of the recovery of by-products. The results obtained at Bangalore are now under consideration of the Madras Government and the Mysore Durbar, both of whom may find it possible to state the library results to commercial account."

"In dealing with the fact of the Commission drew attention to the fact that water-power in India might be turned to account for industrial purposes, and have recommended a survey of our resources. Based on the recommendations made on this question in our Report, the Government have appointed two Engineers to make a preliminary survey with a view of locating the most promising power-sites for detailed investigation. This work is now in progress.

"I will not weary the Council with further illustrations of Government activity in the directions recommended by the Commission, but I ought to draw your attention to the fact that some of the proposals made by the Commission require further examination by specialist Committees before it is possible to take any line of action with safety ; for example, we have recommended Committees to investigate the possibility of establishing scientific services, for the development of industrial banks and for the institution of a system of purchasing Government stores in India.

"This last question of the purchase of stores, I regard as the most important of the measures by which Government can assist local industries in a healthy way, and in order that we may not lose the benefit of the organisation created under war conditions by the Munitions Board, we are preserving, in a modified form, an agency for the purchase of stores for the Army and for those civil departments that find it convenient to obtain their materials through a central organisation. This Branch of the Munitions Board scrutinises all indents submitted for transmission to the India Office ; it removes all items that certainly can be met with safety in this country, and gives advice to indenting officers as to the sources in India from which they are able to purchase their own stores.

"With regard to the activities of Local Governments, I am only partially informed ; but I receive frequent communications from some Governments with requests for advice and help in the organization of their Provincial Departments of Industries. The chief difficulty with them, and with us, is that of obtaining suitable officers to organise the work.

"My Hon'ble friend and former colleague, Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya, gave illustrations of questions about which he thought action could be taken at once, as they are questions about which there is little difference of opinion. As illustrations, I think he referred to the formation of Provincial technological institutions. Judging by the experience of the past, there are few subjects about which differences of opinion have caused greater delay in action. For many years before I left India, discussions were in progress regarding the development of the Engineering College at Sibpur, the institution of a Mining School on the coal-fields and the development of a central technological institute in Calcutta. These questions, which are interrelated, appear to be no nearer solution now than they were ten years ago.

"In 1907, my Hon'ble friend shared with me the work of a Conference at Naini Tal, when we recommended to Government the establishment of a technological institute at Cawnpore. This question has been under ever since and has been attacked by three successive heads of the Industrial Government without final result or action of immediate value to the industry in that district.

"The Hon'ble Mr. Sarma suggests that they should start the buildings that will be required, as building is a case where it is wanted. This pre-supposes unanimity of opinion regarding this question and the government of the institutions projected. It is a very difficult matter to handle unless your horse's head is in the right direction."

"Under the circumstances which I have described, I cannot recommend the acceptance of the Resolution in its present form, not because I do not sympathise with its object, but because we have drawn our plans to fit the rest of the Government machinery, we cannot economically spend more money than has been already provided under various heads. The Hon'ble Mover will remember that my Hon'ble colleague, Sir James Meston offered yesterday to find the money necessary for schemes that may attain reasonable maturity during the coming financial year. Possibly, after this explanation, the Hon'ble Mover may not now think it necessary to press his Resolution in its present form."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:— Sir, I shall profit by the advice that has been very kindly given me by the Hon'ble Sir Thomas Holland and the Hon'ble Sir Fazulbhoy Currimbhoy. I can assure them that I have read the report with some care, but I promise to do so with greater care. I realise the interdependence of the various recommendations of the Industrial Commission's report, and that is why I have not pressed for a larger provision being made in the current year which I would have done, having regard to the importance of the subject, though I know what the fate of such a Resolution would have been. But I know something of the difficulties of Government machinery. I recollect very well when I was Chairman of a Municipality that I could not carry out the construction of a drain for three years, though the matter had been under consideration for five or six years previously, owing to some technical difficulty or another. I fully realise the difficulties of Government departments getting through their work, but the needs of the hour are very urgent, and I hope technical considerations and delicacy and the fear of wounding the susceptibilities of Provincial departments will not continue to keep us in the same position in which we have been for the past 30 years. Sir Thomas Holland has told us what has been done by the Government; we are extremely interested in this and very thankful, but if he analyses his argument he will find that he has given me a very good reason for proceeding with my Resolution. He tells us that, notwithstanding the fact that no final conclusions have been arrived at by the Government of India in regard to the various recommendations of the Industrial Commission, the Government have started various inquiries and that the department has done a thousand other things in the way of carrying out the recommendations made. I do not say that the whole thing should be done at once. What I have said is that you should not wait till the whole scheme has been scrutinised. What I suggested was that something should be done now; that something should be begun during the gestation period; otherwise it is very probable that the gestation will be unduly prolonged, and there may be some doubt as to the parentage. I hope, therefore, that Sir Thomas Holland will not leave India before he pushes this scheme through. Here is a subject, industrial education, statement II at page 227. I do not go through the details, because I do not wish to take up more time; the Provinces surely have some knowledge of this, the machinery is there; why not provide funds for it, whether a department is a department to be divided horizontally or vertically, whether it is to be Imperial or Provincial, should not interfere with providing for a department about which there can be no doubt. My position is that something must be done this year. Is

"In dealing with these heads I think it would be convenient if I advert to some of the observations which have been made in the earlier stages of the discussion of the Budget in reference to matters with which my departments are concerned. I turn in the first place to the observations which fell from my Hon'ble friend Mr. Shukul. My Hon'ble friend has given his annual personation of Mrs. Gunnidge on behalf of the ryots and has stated that he is 'a poor lone creature'. I am bound to admit that on the present occasion there is considerable justification for his attitude of persistent gloom, but I venture to think that, before I conclude, I shall show the Council that there is good reason for believing that there is a bright lining to the cloud that undoubtedly hangs over India from the point of view of agriculture at the present time, and that there is no necessity for the excessively gloomy attitude which my Hon'ble friend has taken up. My Hon'ble friend went on to assert that the Government of India were doing nothing to assist and promote agriculture, and he proceeded further to fortify his statement by a quotation from the reminiscences of Sir O'Moore Creagh, from which he inferred that instead of endeavouring to improve the principles of land revenue administration in this country, the Government of India were purely concerned with the collection of revenue. Well, Sir, Sir O'Moore Creagh was a distinguished soldier and in regard to matters pertaining to the army, I have no doubt that his criticisms in his reminiscences will receive that consideration to which they are entitled."

[8TH MARCH, 1919.]

[Sir Claude Hill.]

I should like to put up one personal petition in this Council in this connection. We all know the proverb, or rather the saying, about Satan's idle hands. My hands will be idle next year when I stop my pension, and it is possible that I may be susceptible to temptation. I may be tempted to write my own reminiscences, though I hope I shall not. I may be tempted in the course of those reminiscences to give expression of views which my friend His Excellency Sir Charles Monro's conduct in this connection of Army headquarters and of the Government of India is not in the least in agreement with. Should I be so rash, then at least I would like to know if the present Members of this Council and who are at present Members of this Council to have sufficient regard for me as to refrain from quoting me in this Council.

"Now, Sir, in regard to the actual state of affairs in India, it is quite true that we have been faced with a very hard year and that it has been a very anxious time, and the questions which have been asked in this Council have shown how keenly Hon'ble Members have appreciated the anxieties of the situation. I laid on the table of this Council on the 19th February a full statement of the situation so far as we know it and of the remedial action taken by the Government of India to meet the situation. From the purely financial standpoint, with which we are chiefly concerned for the moment, I should like to point out in what a very advantageous position we are as compared with corresponding calamities on previous occasions. Although the failure of the monsoon has been perhaps more widespread than on any previous occasion, certainly since 1899-1900, the actual situation as disclosed by the numbers on relief works at present contrasts in the most startling and favourable manner with the situation in 1900. On the week ending the 3rd of March 1900 there were on relief or test works 1,400,000 people. There were on the week ending on the 1st of March of this year on relief or test works 120,000 people. Now, I suggest, Sir, that those are facts from which we cannot get away and that we are not entitled to take the gloomy view which has been suggested by my Hon'ble friend Mr. Shukul in regard to the relative economic position of India, in regard to the relative prosperity of the ryots, and in regard to the relative capacity of those ryots to withstand the difficulties of the situation. I have said that the failure of the monsoon is at least as widespread as in the year 1900; and yet we have this startling contrast in the numbers of the people whose condition has compelled them to resort to relief.

"But, Sir, while in regard to direct famine expenditure there will be comparatively little cost as compared with past occasions, the indirect cost will this year be very heavy. An aggregate sum of Rs. 2,18,94,000 has been allotted to Takavi grants, while considerable remissions and suspensions of land-revenue are anticipated.

"The next subject to which I should like to turn to is that of agricultural education, and I am very glad, as evidenced by my Hon'ble friend Mr. Sarma's question, that the subject continues to retain the interest of this Council, because I have dealt at such length in the past with the matter that I have almost feared to weary the Council with my iteration of the anxiety of Government to develop agricultural education to the highest possible degree. Last year I described what had been done towards stimulating action in the Provinces and towards the establishment, in accordance with the recommendations of the Board of Agriculture, and of the Agricultural Educational Conference, of Agricultural Middle Schools. I am glad to be able to say, as has already been made known in the statement which I laid on the table in response to Mr. Sarma's question, that nearly every Province but one in India has now taken steps to initiate agricultural middle schools. This step has been largely rendered possible by the grant which Sir William Meyer was enabled to make last year of 30 lakhs for technical and agricultural education. Of that sum, I am glad to say I was able to snatch as much as 21 lakhs, a much larger portion than my fair share, from my Hon'ble colleague Sir Sankaran Nair, who did not happen to be quite ready when the flag fell; and these 21 lakhs were supplemented by a sum of Rs. 1,80,000 available from the profits. It will be seen from the statement that we have succeeded in spending that—I think my Hon'ble friend Mr. Sarma will agree,—in a very useful manner by distribution in the Provinces for the establishment of institutions for research in agriculture. I should like to explain, since it is relevant to a good deal of the arguments which we have heard here to-day in connection with other matters, what the reason why we were able to usefully spend that and what part of it came within the category of the objections to doles which were made by the Hon'ble Member, was that for the previous three years, thanks to the assistance of the Imperial Agricultural Adviser, Mr. Mackenna and his Department, the Government had been deliberately, in consultation with Local Governments, accumulating a vast fund, ready to meet any windfalls that might occur. This year, unfortunately, I shall not be able to establish such a preponderating claim, and I am stating my Hon'ble colleague Sir Sankaran Nair has put in a demand for half. Of half a lakh will be available, but I can assure the Council that it will be spent to the very great advantage of agricultural education.

[Sir Claude Hill.]

“Last year I referred, at some length, I am afraid, to what we had in view in constituting the Indian Cotton Committee. That Cotton Committee sat through the cold weather of 1917-18 and got through its work very quickly. We had every hope, in May 1918, that we should get the Report published about June last. But we very unwisely, I am sorry to say, permitted two of the members of the Indian Cotton Committee to proceed Home in anticipation of their signing the Report, since they had agreed to all the important items in it. When the Report was despatched Home for their signature they developed points of difference in regard to minor matters which compelled us to withhold the Report, and the result is that we were not able to get those small points of difference settled until one of them returned again to India. I earnestly hope that we shall be able to make the Report available to the public very soon, and I may say at once that, although it will have in the ordinary course to be referred to Local Governments on many points for consultation, there are one or two main points in regard to which I hope that we shall be able to take action immediately the Report is published.

“The newspapers have referred, one or two of them, to the admirable opportunity which presents itself to my Hon'ble colleague Sir James Meston and myself for spending large sums of money on the development and improvement of agriculture.

“I need only say in regard to that suggestion that I am quite confident that Sir James Meston will do precisely what his distinguished predecessor Sir William Meyer did, and that is to support, and, if possible, to find the money for, any schemes which I am able to demonstrate to him are justified on their intrinsic merits. I have never found the Finance Department refusing any schemes that we could justify on those grounds, and I am perfectly certain that attitude will be continued. But it is quite likely that the resources upon which Sir James Meston can count may sometimes be inadequate, because, as I think Hon'ble Members know, having been engaged during the last three years in evolving schemes of development throughout India, both Imperial and Provincial, we shall be submitting very shortly, or rather we have submitted in some cases, and shall hope to be getting sanction very shortly for, some very large measures of development costing very large sums of money indeed, and it will thus be a problem as to how far and how rapidly the finances of India will permit those schemes to develop. The progress of agricultural development in India has of course been, and still is, enormously handicapped by the relative shortage in India of the requisite number of research officers. We have now, including the provinces, between 30 and 40 scientific research officers in agriculture in India, and this of course compares lamentably with the number, for instance, in the United States. That is one of the prime factors which we hope to place on a better footing by our proposed development.

“The next important matter which I hope to take up and which I hope will form the subject of investigation in the ensuing year is sugar; and I hope a Sugar Committee will be appointed to investigate in particular the comm side of the development of the industry, we have already told the Council on previous occasions what has been done by Mr. Barber of Bombay on the scientific side, and the enormous amount of material which we have accumulated there for scientific guidance in regard to the sugar-cane problem; and it is now chiefly the investigation of which we want to investigate with a view to co-operation of the Government of industrial development, which, under the ægis of the Hon'ble Member, we hope to further in the near future.

"Then I ought to refer for a moment to Mr. Lefroy's report which I mentioned last year. It has recently been published and we are now asking for the appointment of the special officer recommended in the report, to make research into the disease of peritonitis and other diseases connected with silkworms, and we hope to get him to work very shortly, without waiting for the development of the other measures with regard to the silk industry, which Mr. Lefroy advocated.

"The conditions of the monsoon of 1917 were so widely different from those of 1918, and as a result of abundant rain there was so much water, throughout the country that it developed to a very serious extent—an extent which greatly alarmed His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief—the disease known as Surra; and we have taken steps to appoint a Standing Committee in Surra, and that Standing Committee is to direct investigations as to the best method of research and the application of preventive measures, and it is hoped that that Committee will see its way eventually to make recommendations which may have far-reaching effects on this devastating disease.

"I now turn for a moment to forest matters. The war, as I explained last year has, during the past four years, by depriving us of many of our forest officers, slowed down the rate of progress which we hoped to show in the matter of forest development, but, in spite of this handicap, the United Provinces and the Punjab have made large strides in advance in the matter of industrialising some kinds of their forest produce, notably resin; and we are now, as I think Sir Thomas Holland adumbrated just now, taking steps for the selection and appointment of a wood technologist to be attached to the Dehra Dun Research Institute, whose business will be to investigate thoroughly the properties of Indian timbers with a view to placing them on the market in India, thus to utilise for indigenous forests instead of importing timber from abroad. The United Provinces Government have established, in pursuance of their desire to push forest produce as far as possible, a utilization branch in charge of a special conservator. Another matter to which I have referred before, and which I think Hon'ble Members were interested in, is the appointment of forest engineers. A large number of these officers will, we hope, be appointed during the ensuing year, and as soon as suitable officers can be found, there will be a forest engineer or engineers in nearly every Province in India.

"The only other matter connected with forests which I wish to mention is the lac industry, the value of which is perhaps greater than is generally supposed. It amounts to £1½ million a year. With a view to develop that if possible and place it on a sound footing the Board of Forestry, which is to sit in Dehra Dun next month, is going to consider the whole matter in consultation with experts, manufacturers and others, and I hope the result may be that the lac industry will be developed to a very considerable extent.

"I will now turn very briefly indeed to the operations of the Public Works Department. I do not propose to notice minor points, nor do I propose to go again over the ground which has been traversed by the Financial Statement of Sir James Meston in regard to the bigger works; but I should like in reference to the criticisms that have been made of the smaller allotments, both in the case of the productive and protective irrigation works, to make one or two observations in this connection. The critics have been Mr. Sarma, Sir Kzulbhoy Currimbhoy and others, and criticism has also been made in the written statement which has been put forward by my friend the Hon'ble Mr. Ayyangar. Mr. Ayyangar, in particular, has asked what has happened in the Cauvery scheme and why the Cauvery scheme should not be proceeded with? That is a very big scheme with which of course Mr. Ayrton is familiar; but it has been held up because it cannot properly be provided with permanent settlements of certain disputes which have arisen in connection with the Cauvery reservoir, between the Mysore Darbar and the Madras Government. I should not be right, we hold, to permit the Cauvery scheme to proceed until these disputes are settled. I should like also to say generally that when we have criticisms relating to the suggestion that produce should have a larger allotment and the railways a less allotment than has been given by Sir James Meston, that, in the first place, our development of productive and protective irrigation works has been necessarily limited by the state of the state equation; our establishments have been low and we could not have proceeded at the normal rate in any circumstances. But there are other reasons which have operated to deter the Public Works Department on the irrigation side, from pressing for a larger allotment as against railways. One of them—I do not think I have heard this mentioned during the debate—is this. I think nobody who had experience of, or came into contact with, the threatened difficulty last September, October and November, owing to the shortage of rolling-stock and other equipment on the railways, or who realize the imminence of a block in the transfer from one part of India to another of necessary supplies of foodstuffs—I believe no one who had experience of that time of anxiety—would hesitate to say that the first plank in the protection of India from the ravages of scarcity and famine is to place our railways on such a plane of efficiency that there should be no risk of the repetition of the threat of such a calamity. At that time—I am speaking of September, October and November, when the war was still on—the chief anxiety of those who realized the apprehended scarcity in various parts of India was that it would be impossible to transfer foodstuffs sufficiently rapidly from one part of India to another owing to the depletion of rolling-stock and other equipment. Therefore, having been through that time of anxiety, I for one am fully convinced that the first essential, both in regard to industrial development and to the prevention of famine and its consequences through a shortage of foodstuffs, is the urgent need for restoring our railways to their former grade of efficiency.

[Mr. Claude Hill.]

“On the financial side, I should like to mention that the productive irrigation system gave us a net profit last year of 345 against 341 lakhs which we anticipated, and those who have read the Statement will see that we anticipate a revenue of 361 lakhs next year, the increase being due to the development of irrigation.

“One point remains: We have appointed Messrs. Barlow and Meares to examine, and make a preliminary survey of, the potentialities of India for the utilisation of water-power for the development of industries; and we hope to get preliminary notes from them commencing from June next. Of course these preliminary reports will not be conclusive: they will be merely indications of where and how there seem to be probabilities of developing hydro-electric power to industrial advantage.

“That, I think, represents all the matters with which I need trouble the Council at present. But I should like to communicate a piece of information which we have just received, namely, that before the end of this month, the amount of wheat from Australia which we hope will have actually arrived will be 63,200 tons.

“And that reminds me of a criticism which was made also by my Hon'ble friend Mr. Shukul. I began with my Hon'ble friend and I propose to finish with him. He said that we had recklessly exported foodstuffs when we ought to have known better, thereby imperilling the well-being of the people of India. I interjected a question to ask the date to which he was referring, and he said 'before we prohibited exports.' We actually began to check exports before September. We actually prohibited exports of the major foodgrains at the beginning of October, and we had the situation carefully under observation from the time of the Nagpur Conference, that is, the 15th August. Hon'ble Members perhaps still recollect that there was a war on at that time; and that the war might continue for at least a year. I am perfectly certain that every Member of this Council desired up to the last moment that it was safe, India should continue to give aid and assistance to the allied cause ; and it was for that reason that up to the last moment we held our hands and refrained from prohibiting the export of grains designed to help our Allies. But so soon as it became evident that it was unsafe to permit unrestricted export, we restricted export of the kind in question, as is evidenced from the information I have just given. I am sure that the stocks in India shall, as rapidly as possible, be replenished by imports from abroad."

[Sir Claude Hill ; Rai Bahadur B. D. Shukul.]

RESOLUTION RE EXTENSION AND IMPROVEMENT OF AGRICULTURAL EDUCATION.

The Hon'ble Rai Bahadur B. D. Shukul :—" Sir, I beg to 3-57 P.M. move that—

'This Council recommends to the Governor General in Council that the provision for expenditure under Agriculture be increased by Rs. 50 lakhs to provide for the extension and improvement of Agricultural Education.'

" Sir, before I make any observations on this Resolution, I wish to express my regret that my Hon'ble friend Sir Claude Hill seems to be under the impression that I stated the other day that Government did nothing for the improvement of Agriculture. So far as I remember, I never meant to say that. What I really meant to say was that whatever the Government had done was not commensurate with the needs and requirements of the country ; and to that position I still adhere. What I think is that very much more has yet to be done, and that all that could be done has not been done.

" Now, coming to my present Resolution, I shall not detain the Council very long, for the reason that the cause of agriculture in my humble opinion needs no advocacy especially before this Council which is responsible for the permanent improvement of the moral and material well-being of the Indian population of whom more than 85 per cent. draw their sustenance directly or indirectly from the land.

" It is indeed a sad irony of fate that the question of agricultural education upon which solely hinges the further advancement of the cause of agriculture and the very success of the Agricultural Department itself, failed for a long time to receive such attention of the Government of India as was its due, and that even though the Government has of late taken a greater interest in the subject, yet the Government policy with regard to agricultural education should have proved a failure. This I say on the strength of the statement found in paragraph 324 of the Quinquennial Report of the Progress of Education in India for 1912-1917 to the effect that 'the results have hitherto been disappointing.'

" Although it was so far back as 1880 that the Famine Commission expressed the view that 'no general advance in agricultural system can be expected until the rural population had been so educated as to enable them to take a practical interest in agricultural progress and reform,' and although Sir Edward Buck pointed out at the Simla Agricultural Conference in October 1898 that 'it was no longer a matter of choice whether agricultural departments could take up the subject of agricultural education or not, but it was a positive duty which they could not evade unless released by the Secretary of State from the obligations put upon them.' Yet adequate attention was not paid to it for a long time. However, it is a matter of great satisfaction that of late the Government of India have begun to take a more real interest in the subject, as reflected in the prolonged and close attention which has been paid to the question of the conference of agriculturists and educationists which met at Pusa in 1916 and again at Simla in June 1917. For this I cannot but express a sense of gratitude to the Government of India as well as to my Hon'ble friend Sir Claude Hill, the Minister in charge of the portfolio of Agriculture.

[Rai Bahadur B. D. Shukul; Mr. K. V. Rangaswami Ayyangar; The Vice-President; Sir Claude Hill.]

"The Government have the machinery to bring into effect the intentions of the Government. Knowledge and will is also there, but what we require now is enthusiasm and money. Without money, i.e., without adequate funds, no Local Government will be in a position to carry into effect a substantial advance so as to produce a tangible result upon the system of agriculture in India. The conclusions which have been arrived at by the latest conference held to discuss the subject, especially the Resolutions recommending the establishment of a large number of agricultural middle schools and institutions for the training of teachers for such schools, have to be complied with.

"Sir, I think the present allotment made in the Budget under the head of Agriculture will not be quite sufficient for the undertaking of this ambitious object. Although I am glad to notice an improvement of about 25 lakhs in the Financial Statement under this head as compared with that of last year, yet, I think, it is inadequate. Reference to the statement furnished by my friend, the Hon'ble Sir Claude Hill, in reply to the question put by the Hon'ble Mr Sarma, would show that out of Rs. 20 lakhs spent on agricultural education out of the special grant of 30 lakhs sanctioned for the current year for the purpose of technical and agricultural education, a sum of 4 lakhs only was spent for the establishment of agricultural middle schools in this country, and what was the result? We could only get two schools for Madras, three for Bombay, two for Bengal, one for the United Provinces and one for the Central Provinces, that is nine in all for the whole of this country. Well, Sir, I beg to ask, is this a rate of progress with which the Government of India should rest satisfied? Does not the importance and the urgency of the subject demand a more forward policy to be adopted with regard to it, and is it too much for me to expect that the Government will see their way to spend a much larger sum under this head, intimately connected as it is with the immediate moral and material prosperity of the people who contribute so largely to the Imperial revenues? For these reasons, Sir, I beg to commend this Resolution to the acceptance of the Council with all the earnestness and emphasis that I can command."

4.3 P.M.

The Hon'ble Mr. K. V. Rangaswami Ayyangar:—"In the agenda paper it is said that this subject is to be taken up on the 10th March; so I suggest, Sir, that this be postponed till the 10th March."

4.4 P.M.

The Hon'ble the Vice-President:—"I propose like Sir Claude Hill to finish with Mr. Shukul."

The Hon'ble Sir Claude Hill:—"I hope, Sir, my Hon'ble friend, Mr. Shukul, will not place the malicious meaning upon the word 'finish with' which that word might seem to suggest. I hope that I will end up with Mr. Shukul on our usual terms of mutual regard and friendship. It goes to my heart, Sir, to have to oppose a Resolution which offers to give me for expenditure an additional sum of money. It is rather like biting the hand that feeds one, and I feel that I lay myself open to the charge of ingratitude; but the simple facts of the case are these. Agricultural education, like so many other things, is essentially Provincial, and the situation of the Government of India vis à vis the development of agricultural education is one of applying a stimulus and inducing Local Governments to make a start, sometimes rather reluctantly, I am afraid; though in some Provinces a good start has been already made. My Hon'ble friend has hardly referred to the grant which has been made."

[8TH MARCH, 1919.]

[Sir Claude Till; Rai Bahadur B. D. Shukul.]

last year and to the 22 lakhs which have been expended in the development, chiefly of agricultural education, by the Government of India; that grant; but I may mention that the 22 lakhs which were sanctioned by the Local Governments are now practically covered, or covered a very large majority of the amount put to us by Local Governments. With the 15 lakhs which I have the moiety of the grant this year, I cannot say that the Province is at present with schemes which would justify me in asking for more of the 22 lakhs. And here I should like, from my experience of this matter with the Local Government, to endorse what fell from Sir James Meston, when he said that the doles. I happen to have been a member of the Bombay Legislative Council and my experience of these doles, if I may use a Parliamentary expression, was that they were an unmitigated nuisance. We were given instructions that we were to spend within a given period a given sum on a given object; and the result of that was unquestionably uneconomical expenditure of public funds. Local Governments did not have the time to consider and evolve satisfactory schemes for meeting the objects which they were directed to meet from these doles, and personally I should be most reluctant to be a party to any system which implied that without full consultation with the Provinces a grant of public money should be made by the Government of India, and that the Provinces should be ordered to spend that grant upon agricultural middle schools and agricultural high schools or whatever the particular object might be. I suggest that the addition to the grant for agricultural education at present suggested might be actually mischievous,—not only not beneficial, but actually mischievous,—and in any case I feel that while there is no question that in a short time we shall be in a position to spend very much larger sums of money annually upon agriculture and agricultural education, we are not at the moment ready for this grant. We only began, as the Hon'ble Mr. Shukul will bear me out, to mature the lines upon which agricultural education should develop two years ago, and it is rather premature to force the pace now, universally, among the Provinces, (Provinces as I say which in some cases are reluctant to move) until results make us certain of the correctness of the policy we have laid down. For these reasons, Sir, I fear I shall not feel justified in urging on my Hon'ble colleague, Sir James Meston, the acceptance of the Resolution moved by my Hon'ble friend."

The Hon'ble Rai Bahadur B. D. Shukul :—" Sir, in view 4-8 P.M. of the explanations given by my Hon'ble friend, I do not think I shall press the Resolution. Yet, I have one or two points which I wish to bring to the notice of my Hon'ble friend. The first point to which I wish to draw his attention is, that I do not understand how it is that while in other countries, such as England and America, provision is to be found for the expansion of agricultural education and agricultural developments even during the time of the war, as a special war-measure, why in India alone agriculture should have been relegated to a backward position. My submission to Government, therefore, is that early steps should be taken to give prominence to agricultural reforms, and the principle should be recognised that agricultural reforms have as strong a claim upon the finances of the State as any other reforms. The second point to which I have to draw the attention of the Hon'ble Member is this : I tried to find out in the Financial Statement how much money was provided for agricultural education and how much was spent on it from year to year, but there is no comparative statement or anything of the kind to show how expenditure on this particular head was incurred. In future, I would therefore request the Hon'ble Member in charge of Finance and the Hon'ble Member in charge of Revenue and Agriculture that more precise and clear information should be given in the Financial Statement as to what amount is to be allotted for this purpose, and how much is spent, so that in future we may have the advantage of a comparative statement to find out how the position stands. With these words I beg to resume my seat. I do not press the Resolution."

[Mr. H. F. Howard; The Vice-President.]

[8TH MARCH, 1919.]

4-10 P.M.

The Hon'ble Mr. H. F. Howard :—" Sir, may I rise to offer an explanation. The Financial Secretary's Memorandum was circulated to all the Members of the Council, and if the Hon'ble Mr. Shukul will turn to paragraph 227 thereof at page 10 he will find the information he requires."

The Hon'ble Mr. H. F. Howard :—" The Hon'ble Member desires to withdraw his question. The Council, withdrawn. The Council adjourned on Monday, the 10th March, 1919, at 11 A.M."

LEGISLATIVE DEPARTMENT.

THE PROVISIONS OF THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA ACT, 1915.
(5 & 6 Geo. V, Ch. 61.)

The Council met at the Council Chamber, Imperial Secretariat, Delhi, on Monday, the 10th March, 1919.

PRESENT :

The Hon'ble SIR GEORGE LOWNDES, K.C.S.I., K.C., Vice-President, presiding,
and 52 Members, of whom 46 were Additional Members.

OATH OF OFFICE.

The Hon'ble Mr. William Malcolm Hailey, C.S.I., 11-8 A.M.
C.I.E., made the prescribed oath or affirmation of allegiance to the Crown.

FINANCIAL STATEMENT, 1919-20.

THIRD STAGE.

The Hon'ble Sir C. Sankaran Nair :—" Sir, I beg to introduce 11-9 A.M. the following heads of the Financial Statement for 1919-20 : —

Revenue.	Expenditure.
Sanitation.	Sanitation.
Education.	Education.

"As regards Education, it will be seen that the revised Budget Estimate for the current year was nearly 594 lakhs, while the Estimate for 1919-20 is nearly 731 lakhs. The reasons for this are explained in the memorandum published in the Gazette of the 21st instant. During the past two years our Imperial Expenditure for Education have been increased by 90 lakhs recurring, namely 30 lakhs for the training and pay of teachers, 30 lakhs for elementary education, and 30 lakhs for industrial and agricultural education. Excluding the above, since we do not know the proportion of it which will ultimately be used by the Department of Revenue and Agriculture, the recurring Imperial allotments have now risen to 18 lakhs a year, and the whole of this addition has been made with effect from the year 1912-13. From the close of 1910-11 up to date the Imperial assignments (capital and recurring) allotted to Education are not far off a total of 14 crores, nearly the whole of which has been assigned to the provinces. These calculations do not include the annual grants of 40 lakhs made in 1902-03, 10 lakhs made in 1904-05 and 5 lakhs in 1906-07. The orders against the utilisation of provincial balances during the war and the delay in the maturing of certain schemes account for considerable balances standing with Provincial Governments, especially Bengal, out of the assignments of the past six years. It is to be hoped that this money will now be put to use and Hon'ble Members will observe that an increase of 46 lakhs is anticipated in the coming year in the expenditure from Imperial grants, while it is encouraging to find that the provision from ordinary provincial resources is about 58 lakhs more than in the revised Budget of the current year. As regards the last Imperial grant of 30 lakhs, the Revenue and Agricultural Department enjoyed the lion's share during the current year. The Education Department took 9 lakhs and has distributed it all. No one, I am sure, certainly not I, would grudge the money devoted to agricultural education. But I must demur when my Hon'ble Colleague says I was not ready when the flag fell. At that time the Industrial Commission's report had not even appeared and large expenditure on industrial education on the eve of its appearance would have been little less than a mark of disrespect to the Commission and might have resulted in that sort of wasteful expenditure which my colleague has so rightly deplored. For the same reason, the distribution had to be made for non-recurring objects and for those schemes which were the most ready or which it appeared most useful and simple to bring into effect. We hope to utilise a larger share next year as I trust that Local Governments will shortly be ready with schemes framed in accordance with the recommendations of the Industrial Commission's Report. It is possible that we may use some part of this allotment on Imperial institutions should it be decided to bring them into being.

"Mr. Sharp will presently lay on the table the figures and the usual brief narrative for 1917-18. The increase in public institutions during 1917-18 was 4,558, while that of pupils was a little under 100,000. This shows a slackening of the pace of progress which fortunately had been maintained during the earlier years of the war. It is hardly a matter for surprise that the effects of the war showed themselves in that year in our educational figures. But if adverse circumstances have tended to lower the rate of progress the enthusiasm for the spread of education has shown no diminution. The closing period of the war has been marked by a noteworthy movement in favour of compulsory primary education. This, as suggested by Sir Harcourt Butler in one of his speeches on the late Mr. Gokhale's Bill, has taken the form of Provincial legislation. In five of the major provinces measures permitting of the adoption of compulsion have been passed or have reached various stages. In some cases they were introduced as Government and in some cases as private Bills. It is now therefore at the option of local bodies so empowered to introduce compulsory primary education provided they are able to make necessary arrangements and to show Governments the advisability of such action. With a view to this end they will be able to raise special taxation.

"This does not of course imply that Local Governments will not assist in introducing such measures in areas where such assistance is required. Indeed, the Government of Bombay have, by rule, guaranteed one-half of the cost of providing free and compulsory primary education incurred by a municipality for this purpose in any given year, and cases are contemplated in which even a larger grant will be given. Thus the initiative for further progress now largely falls, in some of the provinces, and will tend more and more to fall on local authorities. At the same time I should like to say that I fully sympathise with the spirit underlying Mr. Sarma's Resolution put forward on a larger provision for primary education. No one would rejoice more than I in to see such money given. I endorse all that Sir James Meston said about the prime importance of getting a number of trained teachers. We have, as this Council is aware, made recent provision for this and for raising the pay of teachers, and reports show that provinces are making a wise use of this grant.

[Sir C. Sanjivan Nair.]

"Under Sanitation the principal feature is the increasing increase in our expenditure. The Budget Estimate, both Provincial and Imperial, for next year provides for an increased expenditure of 40.25 lakhs. The Provincial estimates are responsible for 30.91 lakhs of this increase. There are many who may not regard the increase as adequate and who will think that the Government is not spending enough on sanitation. That Government was fully aware of the inadequacy of the present expenditure was made clear in the Circular of June last on the organisation of public health administration in rural areas. The Sanitary Commissioner calculated the additional cost of his proposals at a lakh of rupees for every million of the population. Nor is this all. There are the problems of housing, of better water-supply, of the protection of our ports against imported disease. If our expenditure is incommensurate to these many needs, it is (and here I am sure I may speak for the Local Governments) our poverty and not our will that consents to such a situation. We all heard what Sir James Meston said on Saturday about the Resolution on Sanitation, etc. My Department has its recommendations ready. The needs of Sanitation are indeed inexhaustible. I have already spoken at some length in answering questions on the ravages of influenza. Fortunately such awful visitations are rare.

"The sanitary reserve at the disposal of the Government of India was 8.08 lakhs. In introducing the Sanitation and Education heads of the Budget last year, I stated that some portion at any rate of this sum would be utilised in assisting Local Governments to provide for the improvement of the health conditions attending pilgrimages. A sum of 1½ lakhs was accordingly assigned to Madras, and sums of 1 lakh each to Bombay, the United Provinces and Bihar and Orissa. These allotments were intended for the improvement of pilgrim centres. In addition, one lakh was given to the United Provinces for the improvement of the pilgrim routes to Badrinath and Kedarnath. Thus 5½ lakhs were allotted for this laudable object. Of the balance, capital assignments were made for the housing of clerks in Simla, which was one of the recommendations made by the Simla Improvement Committee, and for minor Administrations. Half a lakh was given to Madras for anti-malarial work. Next year our reserve will stand at 8.17 lakhs. Hon'ble Members have already heard in the course of one of my replies what is proposed to meet the housing problem in Bombay city. I can assure my Hon'ble friend Sir Dinshaw Wacha, who takes so laudable an interest in this subject, that it is one the importance of which I fully appreciate.

"Next I have to speak of Research. The Indian Research Fund Association received during the year the full normal grant of 5 lakhs. The inquiries conducted under the Association continue to be circumscribed by the absence of a large number of officers on military duty, but during next year we are likely to get back many officers, and we can confidently look forward to a considerable expansion of activity. We have appointed a Special Officer to investigate influenza. As in previous years, allotments have been made for plague prevention experiments and hookworm inquiries. We are also assisting experiments regarding leprosy treatment. The success achieved by the laboratories in supplying vaccines to His Majesty's forces for the protection of the troops from the ravages of typhoid, para-typhoid and cholera has been remarkable. But regarding these and other kindred matters I trust my friend General Edwards will presently give you some interesting details. I need merely add the hope that in coming years the wide field which India offers for medical research will be fully utilised.

"Though I am not introducing the head Scientific and Miscellaneous Department, the Education Department deals with several subjects classed under it. I am not introducing the head Scientific and Miscellaneous Department, the Education Department deals with several subjects classed under it. I am not introducing the head Scientific and Miscellaneous Department, the Education Department deals with several subjects classed under it.

[Sir C. Sankaran Nair; The Vice-President; Mr. H. Sharp; Major-General W. R. Edwards.] [10TH MARCH, 1919.]

"All here are fully aware of the splendid work carried on by the Archaeological Survey under Sir John Marshall, who, I regret to say, is compelled by ill-health to go to England for a time. The Zoological Survey, though less in the public eye, has continued to do good service and has latterly assisted in research regarding the importation of disease. The popularity of the Indian Museum is maintained. All I need add is that during the current and ensuing years we have budgetted for an Indian War Memorial which will take the shape of a Museum at Delhi. It will be temporarily located in the Fort and, though the collection of exhibits is still proceeding, I hope it will shortly be open to the public. I think that all will approve the idea that India should possess a collection of trophies as a memorial to her effort."

The Hon'ble the Vice-President :—"Do I understand that the Hon'ble Member desires that others in his Department should supplement his statement?"

The Hon'ble Sir C. Sankaran Nair :—"It is usual for the Educational Commissioner to lay his report on the table. Mr. Sharp will do that."

The Hon'ble the Vice-President :—"The Hon'ble Member also referred to Major-General Edwards."

The Hon'ble Sir C. Sankaran Nair :—"Yes, he will also submit a statement."

11-18 A.M.

The Hon'ble Mr. H. Sharp :—"As is usual on this occasion, I beg to lay on the table the General Tables for education, also the brief annual narrative. In addition, I beg to lay the paper called the Statement of Educational Progress in India, or as it is usually called, Salient Features, which differs from the General Tables in that it gives provincial figures and also comparative figures over a series of years."

11-19 A.M.

The Hon'ble Major-General W. R. Edwards :—"Sir, my illustrious predecessor, the late Sir Pardey Lukis, when he addressed this Council two years ago, pointed out that scientific investigation and preventive medicine could never again be relegated to the background. Medical research is now admitted on all sides to be a vital part of Government activities. The appalling pandemic of influenza which swept over and ravaged the whole of India has drawn attention in an acute form to the urgent necessity, not only of developing all our existing arrangements for research, but also of applying the knowledge, so acquired, by means of efficiently organized public health services. I wish to say something further on these points, but before doing so, I will give a brief review of our activities during the last two years."

"The exigencies of the war demanded the reversion of the majority of the officers of the Bacteriological Department to military duty, where they formed the major part of the staffs of the Central Laboratories in Mesopotamia. Those remaining in India were engaged almost entirely on war work, that is in the preparation of vaccines, intended to protect the troops in India, and overseas, from typhoid and para-typhoid fever and cholera. I am proud to be able to say that, in spite of the enormous demands for vaccines, we have been able to meet such demands without indenting on the Home authorities, and we supplied His Majesty's forces in Mesopotamia, East Africa, Egypt and Palestine, as well as in India. The Central Research Institute at Kasauli developed its vaccine production to an almost incredible extent. The yearly average before the war was eighteen and a half thousand cubic centimeters. During the war it rose to over 2½ million cubic centimeters, and included anti-typhoid, cholera, pneumonia and influenza vaccines. From a monetary point of view, the value of this Kasauli vaccine, for the period of the war, was about one million sterling. In addition to turning out these vaccines, equipped three laboratories, two of which were sent overseas. I am sure the Council will agree with me that the greatest credit is due to Lieutenant-Colonel Harvey, Director of the Institute, and his staff for their excellent and most successful work.

"The Bombay Bacteriological Laboratory at Parekh is also enormously developed its production of vaccines, other than plague, which latter is their speciality and the manufacture of which continued. The total vaccines issued from this laboratory to the troops in India and abroad was over $1\frac{1}{2}$ million doses and in addition to this, the Director, Lieutenant-Colonel Glen Liston from June 1916, undertook the supervision of the bacteriological work in the base hospitals of Bombay.

"The Pasteur Institute at Kasauli also assisted in the war. For it treated no less than 2,177 soldiers sent from the war areas overseas.

"To all medical officers connected with the medical laboratories of India, and who, in consequence, were denied the privilege of proceeding on active service, I now take this opportunity of offering my thanks, for their unselfish devotion to duty and for their loyal co-operation.

"In spite of the war and the absence of so many of our officers, we have nevertheless succeeded in carrying out a considerable amount of research.

"An inquiry into diabetes was continued by Major McCay and his co-workers in Calcutta, and a series of papers which are of great scientific value are being published in the Indian Journal of Medical Research. A report has just been submitted by the same officer on the treatment of diabetes which is also, in my opinion, of very great importance, and I propose to approach the Governing Body of the Indian Research Fund Association for funds, with which to continue these investigations.

"The Research Fund has continued to finance the inquiry at Poona on the subject of plague prevention, and Dr. Chitre, under the advice of Lieutenant-Colonel Hutchinson and Major Kunhardt, has made numerous experiments concerning the best methods of rat destruction. This inquiry has yielded good results which will shortly take practical shape.

"At Karachi, Lieutenant-Colonel Greig, working under the Indian Research Fund Association, continued his valuable work on cholera carriers, and he also investigated the anti-beriberi value of certain foodstuffs. His expert advice has been of constant value both to me and to the military authorities. Recently he has submitted a most valuable paper on influenza written in collaboration with Captain Maitra. From his laboratory at Karachi we have also had valuable studies on the curative values of certain drugs, such as chenopodium oil, and thymol, used in the treatment of ankylostomiasis, these were contributed by Captain Wrench, R.A.M.C. Lieutenant-Colonel Greig has just been deputed by the Government of India to proceed with Major Norman White to the Inter-Allied Conference at Paris in connection with Influenza.

"Lieutenant-Colonel McCarrison is on special duty in charge of an inquiry into beriberi, and is investigating other so-called 'deficiency diseases.' A very important paper on his initial results appeared in the January number of the Indian Journal of Medical Research. Three further papers from his pen are in the press and will be published in April.

"The study of 'hookworm disease' has been pursued by Lieutenant-Colonel Olayton Lane in Bengal and by Dr. Mhaskar in Madras. The results show that the incidence of hookworm infection is in many places nearly one hundred per cent. They have further shown that this disease cannot only be cured, but even eradicated, if only the people could be sufficiently educated in sanitary matters.

"Captain Knowles, who is Director of the Pasteur Institute at Shillong, is now engaged in an investigation as to the mode of infection of kala-azar, he also being assisted by the Indian Research Fund Association.

"Dr. S. S. Chatterji has continued his investigation into the bionomics of house flies, and has contributed papers regarding the specific differences of the genus musca. This work is of much importance, as we know that the house fly is a terrible carrier of disease.

[Major-General W. R. Edwards.]

"Another insect engaging our attention is the sand-fly and an effort is being made to discover and destroy these pests in their larval state. This investigation is being conducted by Mr. Mitter at Lahore, who has done good work in this direction.

"Sir Leonard Rogers, among other activities, continues to conduct the general direction of an inquiry into the chemistry of chaulmoogra oil and other oils found useful in the treatment of leprosy. Meanwhile, the Mission to Lepers has instituted a trial, by qualified medical men and women, into the comparative effects of drugs thus prepared. These trials are under the general advice of Sir Leonard Rogers, and the Mission is being helped financially for this purpose by the Government of India.

"There are several other lines of research in progress in India: some of them are of a highly technical nature. For example, a study is being made regarding the best constitution of media, with reference to vaccine production on a large scale. This is engaging the attention of the staff at Kasauli, who are being assisted by Dr. Norris.

"Dr. Annandale has undertaken surveys in Madras, Persia, Baluchistan and North India in connection with molluscs, with reference to the possibility of the spread of Bilharzia. In the Bombay Bacteriological Laboratory valuable work has been done on molluscs by Dr. Soparkar. The staff of the Bombay laboratory has also been engaged in perfecting methods for detecting typhoid carriers. Captain Malone, who has come out with an excellent reputation for research, has recently been sent to investigate influenza.

"From what I have just said I am sure that all will agree that medical research work is of the utmost importance, and further that it is most necessary that we should give the inhabitants of India every chance of getting a first-class training in medical research, in India. Thanks to the energy of Sir Leonard Rogers, a school of tropical medicine with a special hospital of its own, attached to it, will shortly be opened in Calcutta, and now I have the greatest pleasure in stating that there is every prospect of another school of tropical medicine and medical research being shortly opened in Bombay. This school will be based on the splendid Parel Laboratory, which Colonel Glen Liston has by his indefatigable labours brought to such perfection. It will also have a special hospital of its own attached to it. That well-known philanthropist, Sir Dorab Tata, has by a munificent gift of a lakh a year enabled the Bombay Government to proceed with their school, which will not only be well staffed, but also have a number of valuable scholarships, including travelling ones, attached to it. We shall thus shortly have means of giving the best possible training in medical research to Indians. This will enable them to aspire, not only to professorships, but also to the winning of worldwide reputations.

"In addition to these schools it is very necessary that we should have at least two institutes of medical research. I want to see an Imperial Institute comprising an Imperial library and bureau of medical research opened in Delhi, and another institute opened in Southern India. For the first we must depend on the Government of India, and for the second I have reason to believe that we can rely on the munificence of the Tata family, and other wealthy philanthropists of that great Presidency of Bombay. I have just been asked by Sir Dorab Tata if a first-class expert could be found to visit India, at Sir Dorab's expense, to advise on this matter.

"So much for Research, but it must be remembered that without a Ministry of Public Health, such as is now being instituted in Great Britain, and well organised provincial Health services, the knowledge that we thus acquire cannot be efficiently applied. This at least is my private opinion. In such Public Health services all the officers must be responsible, not merely to the members of a Municipality or District Board, but through their superior officers to Government itself. It is only by means of well-paid and well-organised services that officers of public health can act efficiently, without

"A third factor is, however, absolutely essential to the preservation of public health, and that is the education of the masses. Without this the best organized preventive medical service in the world must work in vain. An ignorant populace not understanding the meaning of advice, or the value of orders, will not follow the former, and will actively or passively resist the latter. District visitors and magic lantern lectures cannot do more than touch the fringe of the dense ignorance of the masses. There is only one way to remove this ignorance. The knowledge of public health, like all other knowledge, must be imparted through the schools and colleges of India; this is essential. I know the difficulty, it is first necessary to educate the teachers. Unfortunately too in practically every country in the world, the rulers themselves have never received any education in public health. They therefore find it difficult to believe, even now, in the absolute necessity of giving this instruction in every school throughout the land. I would indeed go further than simply teach. I would, in order to impress the vital necessity of this knowledge on the educated classes, make public health, if not a compulsory subject, at least a highly marked, optional subject, in the Matriculation Examination of every University in India.

"To bring the immense importance of this subject home, I can say without fear of contradiction that such teaching would, alone, without a single additional doctor, or a single drug, save India hundreds of thousands of lives and millions of money every year. To substantiate this last remark of mine I would like as time permits to mention a few diseases concerning which every inhabitant of India should have some knowledge.

"Take first hookworm or ankylostomiasis. This parasite affects to a greater or less extent the rural population of the whole of India, in many parts infecting as many as 90 per cent. It causes anæmia and debility, it renders the sufferers unfit for hard work and an easy prey to other diseases. The means of infection is briefly as follows. Microscopic larvæ hatch out of eggs deposited with human excrement. These larvæ, attaching themselves to the feet or legs of the next comer penetrate the skin painlessly, get into the blood current, so go to the lungs, from the lungs they find their way through the air passages and working up to the throat are then swallowed and thus infect the intestinal canal. This debilitating disease so universal in India could be eradicated by the use of properly attended latrines. It is also not a difficult disease to cure. Another disease is Guinea worm—which in parts of India is a veritable scourge. It is propagated by minute insects (the cyclops) which act as the intermediary hosts and are swallowed with drinking water. This disease may be entirely avoided by straining all drinking water through a cloth as the Jains have been taught to do. Of course boiling the water would also make it safe to drink. Then again take malaria itself. How many villagers know that this disease cannot be contracted except through the bite of an infected mosquito, and that the systematic use of mosquito nets and surface drainage would make an enormous difference in its incidence.

"Cholera, dysentery and typhoid are diseases due to germs derived solely from human excrement. These diseases can only be contracted by drinking water which has been fouled by such excrement or by taking contaminated food or milk. Flies which have been feeding on human excrement are the usual source of food contamination. These germs are killed by a temperature of 140°, and therefore by eating only freshly cooked food with clean hands and drinking only hot fluids you can live without danger in the midst of an epidemic of cholera. Typhus again, which has recently ravaged the United Provinces, is spread by lice and can be avoided by cleanliness.

"That terrible scourge bubonic plague is contracted from the bite of an infected rat flea. Obviously the way to eradicate it is to keep rats out of houses and grain stores, and to destroy them as far as possible. During an epidemic keeping the skin oiled will probably prevent a flea biting. Lastly, the knowledge we have of this worldwide disease, if acted upon, would make an enormous difference in its incidence and so save untold numbers of lives.

[Major-General W. R. Edwards; Sir Thomas Holland.] [10TH MARCH, 1919.]

"I think I have said enough to show that if the knowledge of even these few diseases alone was systematically imparted in every school throughout the land, the effect would be of enormous benefit to the entire population of India. With regard to influenza we have, I regret to say, much to learn. The latest researches go to prove that we have not yet even discovered the germ which is undoubtedly ultra-microscopic and filter passing. This and many other diseases call for and are receiving close investigation.

"I trust that I have not wearied the Council and that I have said enough to convince everyone of the immense importance of medical research, preventive medicine and the education of the whole people of India in public health measures."

11-37 A.M.

The Hon'ble Sir Thomas Holland:—"Sir, I beg to introduce the following heads of the Financial Statement for 1919-20:—

Revenue.	Expenditure.
Salt.	Salt.
Excise.	Excise.
Posts and Telegraphs.	Customs.
Stationery and Printing.	Posts and Telegraphs.
State Railways.	Stationery and Printing.
Subsidised Companies.	Protective Works, Railways.
	Subsidised Companies.
	Miscellaneous Railway Expenditure.
	Capital outlay on State Railways.

"In introducing the heads of business for which I am for the time being responsible, the first comment that I have to make will be received with the unanimous approval of the Council. The Council will regret the absence, and especially the reasons for the absence, of Sir George Barnes, and more than any of you, I, as the immediate and chief victim of his defection, have strong personal reasons for hoping that his recovery may be uninterrupted and his return to duty punctual. Sir George and I have now worked together for a little over two years, and the only serious difference of opinion that has ever occurred between us arose regarding our competing claims for relief from work. In this competition I have to mourn his success.

"Following the good example set last year, I propose to leave my fellow victim, Sir Arthur Anderson, the task of maintaining the standard set by his predecessor in dealing with the subject of railways. My comments on the rest of the work of the Department will seem so dull and uninteresting after the exciting and alarming details we have just heard about flies, lice and hookworms that I will cut my remarks correspondingly short.

"In spite of the increased rates, the volume of telegrams to be handled continues to expand, and for some obscure reason seems twice to have broken all records, first of all during April and May last year, and then again in the following August. For the first 8 months of the current year the telegrams despatched amounted to 14 millions, against 12½ millions for the corresponding period of the previous year. There was a similar expansion in the use of the Post Office, and for parcels the rates had to be raised to keep pace with the increase in railway rates. Sir George Barnes referred last year to the way in which a wholesale resort to the foreign parcel post was adopted in consequence of the shortage of ocean freight. This year another anomaly arose by the abuse of the inland system. In one week in Bombay over 50,000 parcels, containing about 20 million silver rupees, were posted. A similar use of the Post Office on a smaller scale was detected in other towns. It evidently requires some mobility of legal powers to deal with postal epidemics on this scale.

"In two important respects improvements have been introduced, and will be extended, I hope, with increased facilities for obtaining ap materials. One of these is the adoption of motor mail vans to take the place of horse vans in many of the larger towns and on the more important roads, as for instance in the Kangra Valley, to deal with the Kulu fruit traffic.

"Another forward move has been made in the installation of long-distance telephones. The line from Calcutta to the coalfields is now used sufficiently to justify another two trunks. For an early recognition of the commercial value of these lines we are indebted to the support of the Hon'ble Mr. Ironside. The Delhi-Lahore trunk now ready will soon be extended to Pindi and to Peshawar; while some of the large towns in the United Provinces and Bombay are being connected. Possibly before the next Council meeting here, our friends from Bombay and Calcutta may be able by telephone to keep in touch with, if not to control, the flutterings of their respective stock markets during the Budget debate. The total staff of the Department at the beginning of the year numbered something like 108,000, with over 12,000 in the various war-fields. No department has responded more completely to the abnormal war pressure, and the response has been so general that it is difficult to select names without making obvious omissions. I feel sure, however, that every member of the Department would wish me to draw your attention to the inspiring example of Mr. Meredith, the Chief Engineer, to whose technical efficiency and energy we owe the successful working of an organisation which has been carried out in spite of shortage of plant and heavy pressure.

"Government have endeavoured to meet by increases of pay and by grants of war allowances the increased cost of living which has been felt especially in the lower ranks; but increases that are small to the individual make up embarrassing totals. The additional charges, for example, due to war bonuses alone granted to the lower grades of the Post and Telegraph Department now exceed $3\frac{1}{2}$ lakhs a month.

"On the subject of Customs there is very little for me to say. The Financial Statement anticipates an expansion of over a crore of rupees in our revenue. The return of peace will lead, I hope, to some fall of prices, but the reduction which this will entail in our receipts should be more than counter-balanced by an increase in the volume of our import trade as the tonnage position becomes easier and the removal of war restrictions on trade takes effect. The Council may be assured that we are anxious to remove the restrictions, both on our import and our export trade, as soon as we possibly can; and you will find in the Narrative of my Hon'ble colleague, Sir James Meston, in introducing the Financial Statement, an account of the extent to which we have already been able to remove these restrictions. I need not therefore repeat the tale. I am well aware how annoying many of these restrictions have been and how patiently they have been borne by the commercial public of the country.

"I should like to add a few words on the subject of Stationery and Printing. You will notice that there has been a considerable increase of expenditure under this head during the current year; but we hope for a reduction next year. It must be remembered that every expansion of other branches of the administration means more work for the Printing and Stationery Department. As a territorial victim I can testify to the marvellous number and variety of army forms; but in addition to these a very useful piece of work has also been done in reprinting for the armies in the East a large number of War Office publications. The fact that a period of unprecedented demand coincided with a period of unprecedented difficulty in obtaining supplies of imported goods, proved, I am glad to say, a great stimulant to local industries. The Stationery Department has been giving all possible support to the local manufacture of pencils, pens, ink and, above all, paper. The good offices of the Printing and Stationery Department have been enlisted for the purpose of procuring stationery for the Colonies and British possessions further east. A great deal of unusual work has been done in the Controller in recruiting the personnel for the field presses in Baghdad, and in maintaining the personnel and stocks in the various overseas stationery depôts in Mesopotamia, Egypt and Persia. I should like to take this opportunity of expressing my appreciation of the untiring zeal with which Mr. Cogswell and his assistants have met with all demands made upon them.

"Hon'ble Members will be pleased to know that the efforts referred to by Sir George Barnes to increase the output of salt have been already sufficiently successful to cover the deficit due to restricted imports. Improved methods of mining and handling rock-salt at Khewra have resulted in an increased output of nearly 50 per cent. compared with the previous ten-years average, while at Sambhar the current year's output will probably reach the record of a crore of maunds. The facilities for manufacture and the interesting technical questions connected with salt recovery are now receiving special attention, and I am confident that increased production and substantial economies will follow.

"One of the unusual incidents this year for which my Department is responsible, is the completion and publication of the Report of the Industrial Commission. For obvious reasons I wish to pass this incident over with only one comment, and that is my appreciation of the continued and friendly co-operation of my colleagues throughout the tour and of the heavy work done by them in the preparation of the Report."

The Hon'ble the Vice-President :—"Does the Hon'ble Member desire the statement to be supplemented by the President of the Railway Board?"

The Hon'ble Sir Thomas Holland :—"If you please, Sir."

The Hon'ble Sir Arthur Anderson :—"In his speech before this Council a year ago, my predecessor referred to the serious disabilities under which the railways of India have been labouring in recent years. Our Budget of 1918-19 was framed under the shadow of war, and contemplated an expenditure of just over 4 millions. Owing to the impossibility of obtaining an adequate supply of English materials, the programme had of necessity to be confined to such essentials as were obtainable, and it is doubtful whether our very modest English grant of 2½ millions will be spent. On the other hand, we have had to meet special calls in India, and on the whole it is probable that our expenditure will about equal, if it does not slightly exceed, the provision originally made.

"I am glad to be able to say that many of the difficulties hitherto experienced are now in a fair way to be removed. Owing to the termination of the war, the supply of materials has been brought within measurable distance, and this fact, coupled with the liberal provision of funds announced by the Hon'ble the Finance Member in his speech when presenting the Financial Statement, will enable railways to rapidly improve their position. I wish to cordially acknowledge on behalf of railways the appreciation, which the Hon'ble Member then gave expression to, of the services rendered by the staff during the past few years. Ordinarily railway men look upon themselves as fortunate if they escape a vote of censure, and it will be a matter for gratification among them to know that in the anxious period all have of late years passed through they are held to have so well succeeded in the task they set their hands to.

"From what we heard during the debate on the Financial Statement one would be almost justified in concluding that the work railways have been performing has been so satisfactory as to render unnecessary the provision made for them during next year. The opinions expressed must, I fear, be owing to the want of a proper appreciation of the position, and I am beholden to the Hon'ble Mr. Ironside for having so clearly depicted conditions as they actually exist. Railways have been starved throughout the war period, and if leeway is not to be made up without delay, the position will be an impossible one. Neglect to take all possible steps to set the position right could not therefore be excused. Once deterioration sets in, it ever increasing pace, if not seriously tackled, and there can be no economy in refusing to face the situation at the earliest possible moment. Railways are commercial propositions with which the country's prosperity is indissolubly bound up. The greater therefore their efficiency the greater the benefit to the public and to Government. Not only have we to face very large arrears, but we have also to replace withdrawals for war centres, particulars of which together with other details will be furnished by the Hon'ble the Member for Commerce and Industry when discussing the Resolution put forward by the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma for a reduction in the grant.

[Sir Arthur Anderson.]

"The Bill will undoubtedly be a heavy one, but it must be remembered, as pointed out yesterday by the Hon'ble Mr. Ironside, that the stock and materials which it is now proposed to secure will not amount to more than one-half of what the same money would have purchased in pre-war days. Even with the large provision of funds which has been made, we shall not therefore be able to overtake more than a portion, though a considerable one, of the arrears which have accumulated.

"Granting then that our first concern must be to endeavour to overtake the arrears which have piled up during the war period, it will be impossible to allocate any of the funds available entirely to construction. But little advantage indeed would be gained by developing and bringing increased traffic on to main lines until these attain a sufficiently high standard to deal efficiently with what already comes to them, and the most we propose to do therefore in the way of extensions is to re-start some of the works progress on which has been interrupted during the war. If, however, we are in the same position a year hence, as we are now with regard to funds, it may be anticipated that some of the larger projects will then receive attention.

"In questions put by the Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma and other Hon'ble Members during the present Council meetings, reference was made to the old-standing controversy of State versus Company-managed railways, and from the answers given to the question, Hon'ble Members were made aware that in the case of one important railway system it has been decided to transfer its direction a few years hence from London to India, though the particular form which control will take has not yet been arrived at. The Council were also made aware that the appointment of a Committee is contemplated to inquire into the desirability or otherwise on financial and administrative grounds, of modifying the present management of Indian State-owned railways either by substitution of management by Companies domiciled in India, or by extension of one or other of the existing systems. Opportunity will then presumably be afforded to those interested in the question of recording their opinions before the Committee, and it is hoped that as a result of its deliberations, a final settlement of this thorny question may result.

"A matter which has been occasioning Railway Managers the utmost concern during recent months is that of labour. Throughout this country railway men were conspicuous among railways of some other parts of the world which could be named for the loyalty and devotion to duty they showed throughout the long trying war period. Coupled with the strenuous endeavour they were called upon to exert, they, in common with others, have been affected by the general increase in the cost of living. Government and railway managements generally recognised the difficulties in which the lower paid men were placed, and from time to time have endeavoured to improve their position by the grant of allowances calculated to be equivalent to the additional expenditure occasioned by the rise in prices in necessities of life. The position, however, is a constantly changing one and has been receiving unremitting attention, the desire being that all cases of hardship should be justly met.

"I have already referred to the difficulties of obtaining materials during recent years; though these difficulties will be eased in future, it must of necessity be some time before normal conditions of supply are restored. In the meantime we are taking advantage of local resources to secure as much material and rolling-stock as possible. I would like to say a word in this connection with regard to the Tata Iron and Steel Company. This Company has been a veritable Godsend to us during the war period, as but for its enterprise we would, during the last two or three years, have been unable to secure a single mile of additional railway, or to extend a helping hand to Mesopotamia, East Africa and Egypt in the matter of their railway building. For some considerable time the whole output of these works went to the different theatres of war in the East and nothing but praise is due to the Company for the sustained effort they made to meet successfully all calls made upon them. Other firms have also shown their metal by rendering most valuable assistance during these trying times. It would perhaps be invidious to distinguish between them, but I can assure all of those concerned of the high appreciation of Government of the assistance rendered by them.

[Sir Arthur Anderson.]

" Our requirements for the coming year are heavy and large orders have been placed in England, particularly for rolling-stock, engines and machinery. The capacity of India as yet is extremely limited in regard to the former of these items, while none of the latter classes are yet produced in this country. In the many directions in which developments are taking place, we may confidently look forward to railway wagon-building being in the forefront, and though it will probably be a number of years before India will witness its first locally manufactured locomotive running on its railways, it is not beyond the bounds of possibility that in the not distant future we shall see such a result actually achieved.

" A direction in which improvement is showing itself lies in the substitution of oil-burning for coal-burning engines on lines serving West Coast ports. This has been made possible by the supplies of oil which have become available from the head of the Persian Gulf. Its introduction will free a large amount of coal for purposes other than railways, and will at the same time lessen the pressure on railways, so that taken together the advantages to be gained from its introduction are considerable.

" A matter which also is of interest is that of railway-owned and managed harbours. Up to the present time the only railway in the country working and controlling a harbour, where ocean-going vessels can come alongside, is the Madras and Southern Mahratta Railway. This Company have worked the Portuguese harbour of Marmagoa for a considerable number of years past, and though the war has interfered with the successful development of the trade of the harbour, sufficient experience was gained prior to the outbreak of hostilities to prove that the combination of railway and harbour under one management possesses many advantages. It is now proposed to extend the system, though in a more complete form, by constructing a harbour at Vizagapatam, to be owned and worked by the Bengal-Nagpur Railway Company. The scheme at present contemplated is of moderate dimensions, but with the construction of the Raipur-Vizianagram Railway it is confidently anticipated that the trade which will come to the port will necessitate considerable expansion at a not very distant date.

" Perhaps it is not generally known that, while we have been busy during the war period in supplying materials for military railways overseas, either from local manufacture or by dismantling existing lines in this country, we have at the same time been pushing forward the construction of an important strategic broad gauge line, starting from Nushki, on the North-Western Railway, to Dalbandin, and from thence to the Persian boundary. The railway runs through a most inhospitable country, but despite all difficulties, including the almost total absence of potable water throughout its length, the first 120 miles were built in the short period of four months. When it is remembered that all labour, materials, stores, supplies and water had to be carried along with the railhead, the achievement is one which those in charge of the work have reason to be proud of. The total length of line already constructed is about 350 miles.

" The only other purely railway matter to which I would refer is that of the restrictions which had been placed upon travel during the last two years. Government are well aware of the discomfort and inconvenience to the public by the curtailment of train services which have been

[10TH MARCH, 1919.] [Sir Arthur Anderson ; Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma ; The Vice-President.]

The pressure on railways left them no option but to bring it into being. Now, however, that normal conditions are being resumed, Government will use their best endeavours to restore the services to their former level at the earliest possible date. Already some improvements have been effected, particularly on the North-Western Railway, and similar action will be taken on other lines immediately opportunity presents itself.

" I would like to now refer to a subject which has been mentioned in recent issues of the Administration Report on Railways. Government have for some time past had under consideration certain schemes for the construction of aerial ropeways for the carriage of public traffic in various parts of India. Though this form of transport is not altogether a novelty in this country, it has not so far been used for the carriage of public traffic. Experience in other countries has, however, proved that it is eminently suited for the opening up of mountainous tract where the cost of construction of railways or of roads would be prohibitive ; and there is obviously ample scope for its employment for this purpose in India, as well as for the replacement of cooly transport to and from hill stations in Northern and Southern India which are not served by railways. The most important of such schemes now before the Government of India contemplates the construction of a ropeway from Jammu to Shahabad in Kashmir, and of a railway in continuation from Shahabad to Srinagar. This scheme has been investigated in detail on behalf of the Kashmir Durbar by a well-known Karachi firm who are in negotiation with the Durbar with regard to it. Further schemes of a similar nature are also contemplated by the same firm as well as by other promoters. Some of the projects have already made considerable progress, and the Railway Board hope that circumstances will so shape themselves as to admit of a start being made with construction before very long."

RESOLUTION RE REDUCTION OF BUDGET ALLOTMENT FOR RAILWAYS.

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma :—" Mr. Vice- 12-3 P.M.
President, in my Budget remarks I have stated that I am one of those who believe in the rapid development of railways in this country . . .

The Hon'ble the Vice-President :—" May I remind the Hon'ble Member that he should first read the Resolution he moves ?"

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma :—" I beg your pardon.

" Sir, I beg to move the following Resolution :—

" This Council recommends to the Governor General in Council that the Budget allotment of £17·7 millions for the construction of railways, be reduced by £5 millions."

" Sir, I have already stated in my Budget remarks that I am one of those who believe in the rapid construction of railways with borrowed funds, and if I bring forward this Resolution asking for the curtailment of the Budget allotment of railways by £5 millions on the capital expenditure, it is because I am not satisfied, on the materials available to Hon'ble Members, that there is any necessity whatsoever for such a large expenditure of money consistently with the needs of the country or with the needs of any of the other branches of administration, and also I may say, consistently with economy. At this juncture I may be permitted to state that perhaps the procedure that is followed in Madras, if followed here, would help Hon'ble Members in appreciating more correctly the value of the Budget statements than is at present possible. We are here furnished with a statement of the existing state of the establishment, the existing state of the administration and the proposed increases in its various branches, together with the details as far as they can be given, so that Hon'ble Members will know exactly where they are, in dealing with the details. Now here, it may be, that that procedure cannot be followed in its entirety in the case of the Government of India which may have to deal with additional taxation proposals. But I humbly submit that in the case of departments like the Post Office and the Railway, where there cannot be any question of disclosure of secrets, it would help us considerably in arriving at a correct understanding and appreciation of the existing state of things if that procedure were to be followed. For instance, we might be told what exactly is the number of wagons required, what exactly is the number of engines required, what approximately is the quantity of material that is to be carried, how the stock is proposed to be added, or what the cost of it is to be approximately, so that we may know whether there would be so much need for materials, whether the materials are being properly priced, whether there is so much need for the increase of engines or wagons and so on. Of course it may be said that in the details prices cannot be given, as that would mean dangerous disclosures. I humbly submit that that argument does not seem to be sound, because if the details are given in respect of contracts already made, there cannot be any difficulty whatsoever; people will be able to appreciate whether the contracts are proper or not; if they are in respect of future contracts, then it is but right that everybody in the market should know exactly what is wanted by the Government so that the Government may purchase at the lowest possible rate. I allude to this fact, because supposing we had known what the number of wagons or other materials proposed in this year is, what the increased traffic would be for which the increase in the number of wagons is meant, what the cost of these materials is to be and what the proposed cost is, then certainly we should have been able to appreciate correctly the need for this 35 crores of rupees expenditure. So much for the difficulties of Hon'ble Members.

"Now on the materials available, can Hon'ble Members be accused of having criticised adversely, wrongly and ignorantly this large programme of railway expenditure that is proposed during 1919-20? My submission is, no. I am not here, as I have already stated, to defend any particular position. We are here to bring to the notice of His Majesty's Government in India what our views are in respect of the various branches of administration. Certainly if we are given the information in the course of the reply to show how those views are incorrect inasmuch as we are not placed in the position of His Majesty's Government where they cannot acknowledge an error or in the position of His Majesty's Government here who are perhaps in the same situation, I should certainly be most happy to withdraw my Resolution; but on the materials furnished to us, I think I am perfectly right in asking for a retrenchment on the lines I have suggested. Why is it so? Now the Hon'ble Sir Arthur Anderson has told us that owing to the war we have not been able to replace various materials; that the machinery is out of order, and consequently there would have to be a good many replacements before we can cope with the traffic that is at present ready and that is going to be increasingly ready for conveyance the moment facilities are afforded to the public. I quite appreciate that position, and I see that under the head of working expenses a sum of about 10 crores of rupees has been taken for replacements, etc., and I take it that that grant, though it is a very large grant, would meet the necessities of the case, and therefore in respect of making the present machinery efficient, I think there is no dispute at present between the non-official Members and the Government, and they have not criticised that part of the Budget. Therefore, we must take it that we proceed with the railway appliances in the same state of efficiency as they were in before the war with such increases as may have been made during the course of the war.

"Then what is our next position? I understand and appreciate correctly, and I myself feel the difficulty as to whether by curtailing the expenditure we might not add to the difficulties of the public in reducing facilities by additions to the coaching or to the goods wagon stocks. But I am, however, assuming that there is a difficulty, I will never arrive at the conclusion that because there is a difficulty and therefore there is a need for increase, therefore there must be so much increase. It does not logically follow that because the Railway Department has not been able to meet the demands of the public in the past owing to certain artificial circumstances, therefore they will not be able to meet the same demands or similar demands in future. It will have to be shown how it is so, and I hope, before I sit down to show that part of the programme should be deferred. Now we have been told that there has been a considerable curtailment of expenditure during the war. I will take the first item, for which a grant of £17 millions has been made. I find that during the years 1911-12, 1912-13 and 1913-14 there has been an expenditure of Rs. 1,167 lakhs, or an average of Rs. 389 lakhs a year. Now, if the expenditure during the next four years, namely, 1914-15 to 1917-18 be taken, we will find that it was Rs. 1,141 lakhs. That is, there has been a reduction, taking the average of the previous three years, of Rs. 415 lakhs, and taking the normal increase to be Rs. 389 lakhs, we will arrive at Rs. 389 for the current year + 415 lakhs, or about 804 lakhs of rupees, taking the proportions existing prior to the war and nothing else.

"Then it cannot be said that there has been no increase whatsoever in coaching traffic. We find that while the number of passengers has during the years 1913-14 to 1917-18 varied from year to year and was 457 millions in one year and in 1917-18 it was 436 millions the coaching stock has been increased, I do not say in accordance with the needs of the situation, because there have been loud complaints that there has been overcrowding, and I appreciate the difficulties of the situation, but still there has been an increase and the increase is as follows :—

"It was at the end of 1914-15 22,991 coaching stock, and in 1917-18 23,956, or an increase of 985. If we turn to goods stock we find also there has been an increase. It was 184,376 in 1915-16 and 189,538 in 1917-18, or an increase of 5,162. So there has been an increase, as a matter of fact, in the goods stock.

"Then I submit that the total goods weight that was carried when I spoke last was about 83 million tons, dividing the total mileage by the number of miles run by each ton of goods. That may be a correct method of working or it may not be. If it is a correct method of working, it works out to an increase of about 3 per cent. I find, turning to page 130, that the weight of the principal commodities that were carried during that year 1917-18 were 67.4 million tons. The same or 67.05 in 1916-17. Whereas I find that during 1912-13 it was more than that, about 78 million tons; so that although a certain quantity of goods were to be carried over a longer length of mileage, we find that there has not been an appreciable increase in the weight. And we find if we turn to the agricultural statistics on page 6 that in 1917-18, except in the case of rice, the yield of the other articles in 1917-18 has not been greater than in 1914-15, that the yield of 1918-19 must have been even smaller than in 1917-18. Consequently it cannot be said that the produce of this country, I mean the agricultural produce of this country, the weight of agricultural produce has been so enormously increased as to necessitate drastic changes. It may be that, owing to having to carry the coal traffic which increased by about 4 million tons over longer distances, the goods wagons which were available could not be utilised for carrying the ordinary agricultural produce, but we at any rate think that inasmuch as a large part of the military traffic would not be necessary during the next year, it is possible to effect economies which would make a portion of the rolling-stock available to the merchant dealing in agricultural produce. And I think the same may be said with regard to the carriage of coal. We may be in the wrong, but at any rate we have reason to expect that that would be so.

"Now turning to the goods coaching facilities, we find that about a fourth, or a fifth are military wagons. I do not think that, as the war has come to a close, there would be any necessity for an increase in the military wagons; and the total cost of the goods stock being about Rs. 52 crores, but the increase, at one-fourth, it will not come to more than 13 crores at the old cost. The new cost being heavier, it is possible you would have to increase the Budget expenditure for the same quantity hence there must be economy, and a large increase is impossible in a year of high prices. I therefore submit that, whether we look to the existing agricultural prospect or the agricultural situation of the past few years, or whether we look to the increased facilities, which the Government can place at the disposal of the public in the immediate future, or the amounts of money that were being expended on the development of rolling-stock during the last few years and during the years previous to the war, we are unable to see that there is any need for such a vast expenditure as 1,714 lakhs. Well then with regard to the rest, that is the other items, we are hopelessly in the dark, they amount to 864 lakhs. There may be a very good explanation, but it would be for the erection of additional buildings or expenditure of that kind, or it must be, I suppose, by increasing the length of mileage. If it were so, it would have been a very welcome expenditure, but there are to be no new lines to be constructed. The only new lines to be constructed would cost 76 lakhs of rupees. Therefore we are not contemplating during the next year any very large or any appreciable increase in our total mileage, and it is solely and wholly with a view to the development of open lines, for adding to rolling-stock and making other improvements that we contemplate this expenditure, not to make the old machinery more efficient, but to add to the existing rolling-stock. I hope that the Hon'ble Member in charge of Railways will be able to convince us that there is real need for the money and that the money will be well spent, and then I shall be only too happy to acknowledge that the Resolution, though it serves a useful purpose, will have served its purpose, and withdraw it."

[Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma ; Mr. M. N. Hogg.]

1. The Hon'ble Mr. M. N. Hogg :—" Sir, I really do not know whether to wonder at the pertinacity or to deplore the shortsightedness of my Hon'ble friend in bringing forward this Resolution. I wonder at his pertinacity because I should have thought that the speeches made by the Hon'ble Mr. Ironside and Mr. Howard and Sir Dinshaw Wacha during the last stage of this discussion, to say nothing of the coup de grace administered by the Hon'ble Finance Member, would have entirely demolished any vestige of a case that my Hon'ble friend may ever have imagined himself to possess, but apparently it is not so and he remains unrepentant and unconvinced. It is necessary therefore for me to oppose this Resolution. In doing so it is difficult to avoid repeating a good deal of what has already been said, but I will avoid repetition as far as possible, and I will therefore start by associating myself whole-heartedly with the very excellent speech on this subject made by Mr. Ironside last Friday. Now, Sir, the first point which emerges from this Resolution is whether the proposed expenditure during 1919-20 on railways is in excess of the requirements of the railway system. What are the facts? The facts are that the Mackay Committee recommended an annual expenditure of £12½ millions sterling as required for the railways of India. They recommended that several years before the war, but not only was that recommendation never acted up to as an average annual expenditure, but I think I am right in saying that in no single year was that figure actually attained. We, therefore, entered upon the war with a railway system which had already fallen behind the requirements of the country. I base that statement not only on the fact that we were behind the recommendations of the Mackay Committee, but on what I think was an almost universally acknowledged fact. Every year, when the yield of any particular kind of agricultural produce in any particular district was unusually large, there was the same tale, hopeless congestion, much of the produce spoilt through, being unable to be railed down to the consuming or exporting centres before the advent of the rains.

" Well then, we entered upon the war period with arrears of railway development. During the war the railways have accomplished wonders, but they have accomplished those wonders at the cost being blind as ever. I do not think I need labour that point. It is generally admitted."

[10TH MARCH, 1919.]

[Mr. M. N. Hogg.]

we doing? This extravagant grant, against which my Hon'ble friend rails, simply amounts to giving the railways this year the equivalent of what the Mackay Committee recommended should be spent upon them each year. They recommended 12½ millions and there can be no question about it that the purchasing power of the 24½ millions recommended this year is certainly not in excess of, if it is equal to, the purchasing power of 12½ millions in pre-war days. Therefore, it simply amounts to this, that our estimate for this year is equivalent to what we were told a good many years ago we ought to spend each year on our railways; whereas the railways have been worked to the death during the last three or four years and all repairs and renewals neglected through absolute necessity. I submit, therefore, Sir, that the grant this year is in no way in excess of the requirements; indeed it is barely adequate to the requirements; and I would ask Hon'ble Members of this Council to face this railway situation seriously and to realise that if we are to have a railway system in any way adequate for the requirements of the country, we have for several years to come to maintain railway expenditure on very much the same level as it is in the estimates for the coming year; unless, of course, the cost of all railway materials goes back to pre-war prices which I for one do not expect to see for many years to come. It is not a question merely of this year's programme; we shall have to face a programme of this nature for years to come or else fall hopelessly into arrears. The next point for consideration is whether, if this grant is not in excess of the requirements of the railway system, it is desirable that those requirements should be met. I do not think that I need say much about this, as I understand that even the Hon'ble mover admits that it is desirable. This aspect of the question was also fully dealt with by the Hon'ble Mr. Ironside. There is just one point however I should like to refer to in this connection, and that is the very common fallacy which finds a place in the writings and speeches of some publicists, who ought to know better, the fallacy that it is only the commercial classes who really benefit by an efficient railway system. The truth is that, although, of course, the commercial classes like everybody else benefit by an efficient railway system, there is nobody who benefits more than the agricultural labourer who is the backbone of this country. As the Hon'ble Sir Claude Hill pointed out on Saturday, in times of scarcity, an efficient railway system is required to relieve that scarcity; in times of prosperity an efficient railway system is required to enable the agriculturist to reap the full fruits of the prosperity.

"Well, Sir, I have accused the Hon'ble Member of shortsightedness in moving this Resolution, and I propose to attempt to justify that accusation. In this connection the first point to which I would refer is the remark made by the Hon'ble Mr. Howard who pointed out that by starving your railways you were killing the goose that laid the golden eggs. In support of this I need only refer the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma to the Hon'ble the Finance Member's Narrative relating to this year's Budget, in which it is pointed out that railways this year were a great standby, and similar remarks occur in the similar statements of the last two or three years. Throughout the war one of the greatest standbys of Government has been the revenue derived from railways.

"Another reason why I accuse my Hon'ble friend of shortsightedness is this. He professes—and I am sure he feels—great eagerness for the development of industries. In this Council, only on Saturday, he moved a Resolution pressing for further expenditure in carrying out the recommendations of the Industrial Commission. I put it to the Council, what better way of carrying out those recommendations can there be than expenditure on railways. An efficient up-to-date railway system is the very life's blood of, the very first essential to, any industrial development whatever, and I would ask Sir Thomas Holland whether his Industrial Commission's Report is worth the paper it is written on without an efficient railway system.

"I have just one other point in this connection to make, and that is that sufficient from my point of view that this Resolution should be, as it were, rejected. The mere moving of it is capable of doing a good deal of harm and for this reason. We have heard at different times a good deal of the lack of sufficient capital in India for the development of industries or rather of the shyness of Indian capital in coming forward to invest in industries. Can anything be more calculated to increase that shyness and to reduce English capital to the same condition than finding that gentlemen in the position of my Hon'ble friend are always ready to move reductions in the most necessary expenditure on railways? It is no use my Hon'ble friend prefacing his remarks by assuring us that he is a whole-hearted advocate of railway development and then proceeding at once to move the reduction of the most necessary expenditure. Words of that sort will cut no ice with the investor. I do very earnestly ask Hon'ble Members to look at this aspect of the question. We are on the eve of great constitutional reforms in India, constitutional reforms which will enable gentlemen in the position of the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma and those who agree with him to have a great deal more power and influence over financial and political matters than they have at present. Is it likely to encourage the investment of capital, whether English or Indian in industries in this country, if those who possess that capital find Hon'ble Members like Mr. Sarma taking up this attitude towards the most necessary expenditure on what is the very foundation of any industrial progress or development at all? I can assure him from my own personal knowledge that this Resolution and the point of view it represents is calculated to do considerable harm to the prospects of the investment of English capital in this country, and with regard to Indian capital I will leave that to the Hon'ble Sir Fazulbhoy Currimbhoy to say."

[Mr. M. N. Hogg ; Rai Sita Nath Ray Bahadur ; [10TH MARCH, 1919.]
Khan Bahadur Mian Muhammad Shafi.]

12-31 P.M.

The Hon'ble Rai Sitanath Ray Bahadur :—" Sir, I am sorry to have to oppose this Resolution, because of the fact that I am myself a merchant and I know from my personal experience that it would be most mischievous and detrimental to the interests of the country to reduce by £5 millions the allotment of £17 millions made for the construction of railways. Now when scarcity looms very large in the horizon and when famine has already been declared in some parts of Bombay and other places, what could there be more positive proof of the desirability of doing all that we can to make up the deficiency that has been caused by the transfer of wagons and locomotives to Mesopotamia than in the fact that it is on account of the shortness of wagons that restrictions have been placed on the movement of foodgrains from one province to another, and we cannot move grain freely even where it is absolutely necessary that they should be so moved. Only the other day I purchased some thousands of maunds of rice in a place very near to Calcutta; and for the last two or three months I have been moving heaven and earth to get a few wagons to transport that rice, which was lying at a distance of only 16 miles from Calcutta, and where boat or other transport is not available. Even with my best efforts I could not induce the Railway Department to give me these wagons, and I had to move the Hon'ble Sir Arthur Anderson to come to my rescue. He was good enough to refer me to two other gentlemen, and those gentlemen referred me back to the Traffic Manager at Calcutta, and it was with the greatest difficulty that at last I secured a few wagons. However, I have got most of the rice now in Calcutta. It is only the merchant who knows the difficulty that is being experienced in this matter, and it would be a misfortune if, after the drain which has been caused to the railways of India by the transfer of wagons and other rolling-stock to Mesopotamia, we were to reduce the allotment made this year for railway construction. I am, therefore, sorry to have to oppose this Resolution."

12-35 P.M.

The Hon'ble Khan Bahadur Mian Muhammad Shafi :—" Sir, the Hon'ble Rai Sitanath Ray Bahadur has opposed the Resolution moved by the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma as a representative of the Indian mercantile classes. As a representative of agricultural interests in this Council, I rise to my opposition to the Resolution. I cannot help thinking that when

[10TH MARCH, 1919.]

[Khan Bahadur Mian Muhammad Shafi; Sir Thomas Holland; The Vice-President.]

Hon'ble Mr. Sarma decided in his own mind to move this Resolution, he could not have had an adequate conception of the state of things actually existing in the country. My province has been spoken of by the poet of old as Intikhab-e-haft Kishwar, i.e., 'an epitome of seven kingdoms'. I will, therefore content myself with describing very briefly indeed the state of things prevailing in the Punjab, assuming, as I do, that the conditions obtaining in the rest of India are either absolutely or very nearly similar.

"Before the middle of 1914 the process of railway expansion in the Punjab was tardy enough, as pointed out by the Hon'ble Mr. Hogg; but some railway expansion did go on from year to year. Towards the end of that year, because of the terrible world conflagration which has brought untold misery on the human race, the expansion was absolutely stopped owing to the exigencies of the military situation and of the exorbitant and heavy calls on the public exchequer due to military expenditure. For the past 4½ years, therefore, there has been no railway extension of any kind or sort in the Punjab. But matters did not rest there. When the Mesopotamian campaign was undertaken, branch lines in more than one part of the province were taken up and the rails were sent to Mesopotamia to meet military requirements there, with the result that not only was the trade of those parts absolutely dislocated, but a considerable amount of hardship and inconvenience was caused to the people in those tracts who had become accustomed to railway traffic. In addition, a large number of locomotives, wagons and trucks and I am not certain if 3rd class railway carriages also.....

The Hon'ble Sir Thomas Holland :—"Yes."

The Hon'ble Khan Bahadur Mian Muhammad Shafi :—

.....were sent away from our province to Mesopotamia, with the result that the number of goods trains and the number of passenger trains had to be cut down. The consequences of this curtailment of passenger and goods trains are obvious. Foodstuffs from parts of the province, where they were in abundance, could not be transported to places which were threatened with scarcity and famine. Trade was dislocated and the travelling public in the Punjab had to face difficulties and inconveniences which those who have actually seen the discomfort of the travellers with their own eyes can alone appreciate. When I have during my travels over the Punjab in the hot months of June, July and August seen 3rd class passengers packed in 3rd class carriages like sardines, I have pitied their lot, and I have been waiting, anxiously waiting, for the time when the situation would enable the Government to meet the difficulties of the travelling public. To me it seems that the urgent necessity of a speedy restoration of the state of things which existed before the war is the paramount duty of Government, and it is obvious that the industrial development of this country also will require considerable railway expansion in order to meet the needs of the situation. I do not wish to travel over the ground which has already been covered by the Hon'ble Mr. Hogg, and I will therefore conclude my remarks by hoping with the Hon'ble Mr. Hogg that my friend, the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma, will see his way to withdraw this Resolution. I have personally a suspicion that he really intended to put forward this Resolution in order that he might be able to point out where the money for his two previous Resolutions in regard to Sanitation and Elementary Education—Resolutions with which I was in entire sympathy—was to be found. If that is so, there is no sense in insisting on this Resolution now. But if he intended to put forward this Resolution on its own merits, then I am sorry to have to oppose it. With these few words I beg to oppose the Resolution."

The Hon'ble the Vice-President :—"Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya"

[Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya; The Vice-President; Sir Fazulbhoy Currimbhoy.] [10TH MARCH, 1919.]

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya :—" I will speak after my Hon'ble friend (Sir Fazulbhoy Currimbhoy) has spoken."

The Hon'ble the Vice-President :—" I am afraid the Hon'ble Member can only speak when he is called on by the Chair."

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya :—" I refuse to speak until my Hon'ble friend has spoken."

The Hon'ble the Vice-President :—" I have given the Hon'ble Pandit an opportunity of speaking, and he must not complain if I do not give him another."

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya :—" I will be within my rights in asking for another opportunity whether you give it to me or not."

12-42 P.M.

The Hon'ble Sir Fazulbhoy Currimbhoy :—" Sir, I fully endorse what has fallen from my friend the Hon'ble Mr. Hogg. The Indian commercial community, Sir, have always complained of the shortage of wagons. Even before the war, the Indian Chambers of Commerce were feeling the pinch. There were not enough wagons even to transport cotton from one place to another, and a lot of money was locked up by cotton merchants in the districts on account of this shortage of wagons. What has been made most of is that it is only the commercial people who for their own benefit want to extend the railway programme. I think that it is not entirely so. As my friend, the Hon'ble Mr. Shafi, has just pointed out, it affects agriculture also. Then, Sir, we must see what other countries have done in regard to railways. All other civilised countries, according to the proportion of their land and population, have much larger mileage of railways than this country, and we ought, therefore, I think, to extend the programme, which ought to be kept up as my friend, Mr. Hogg, has suggested. I therefore wish that Mr. Sarma will withdraw his Resolution. I think, Sir, that Members in this Council also must think of the commerce of the country. Unless you have commerce extended how can you get more money? In financing the war a lot of money was met by the commercial people; not only that, but the major portion of the loan was subscribed by the commercial people. So Indian politicians ought to try to expand trade and industries in the country. I know my friend, Mr. Sarma, is also very keen on industries. I hope he will do his best to ask his Indian friends on the Madras side to do their best in starting industries. In this way he will get money for sanitation, as well as more money for education. As my friend, Mr. Hogg, has said, railways are the first charge upon which the industries can be extended. With these few words I oppose the Resolution."

The Hon'ble the Vice-President :—" I will give the Hon'ble Pandit another opportunity of speaking. But we must naturally observe the rules under which we meet here. I refer him to rule 11 of the rules for the discussion of Budget Resolutions. But on this occasion I will give him another opportunity."

12-44 P.M.

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya :—" I submit with due respect, Sir, that I do not violate any of the rules. A Member is entitled to speak when he has a chance."

The Hon'ble the Vice-President :—" I cannot hear the Hon'ble Member on a question of order. The rule says distinctly that Hon'ble Members will speak in the order in which the President may direct."

[10TH MARCH, 1919.] [Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya.]

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya:—"Well, Sir, I will not say anything more about it at present, save that I think that Members have a right to speak at the time they think fit. Now, coming to the Resolution, I do not think that my friend, Mr. Sarma, left it in doubt that he appreciates railway development. His point is not that there should be no sufficient provision made for railway development. I understand his point to be that the provision made is excessive. The remarks which have been made after his speech show also that it was so understood by some Members, for instance, Mr. Hogg in speaking of it put it distinctly that the question was whether the provision was in excess of the requirements of the situation. Now, one of the arguments which has been used is that in past years during the period of the war railway finance was starved and the amount that is now provided is, in the words of one of the speakers, just equivalent to what would have been provided in the past years according to the recommendations of the Mackay Committee. There are two points to which I will invite attention. The first is that the Mackay Committee recommendation had never been carried out to its full extent during the years before the war, has never yet been carried out, and it seems to me to be a peculiarly bad time to select after this period in this particular year to make up for the deficiencies of all the grants provided in the previous years according to the recommendations of the Mackay Committee. I have never heard that because a man was starved or had not had sufficient food for a certain number of days, therefore he should be stuffed with an amount of food equivalent to make up the deficiency of the whole period during which he had been starved. The question raised is, whether the amount that you are providing in the Budget will be usefully, reasonably, properly spent, and there I beg to join issue with all the Members who have spoken in support of it. We are not opposed to railway development; we are not blind to the existence of commerce or agriculture; we recognise that railways are beneficial; we want railways to be developed; but the substance of the Resolution, as I understand it, is whether you are likely to spend the amount that you are providing reasonably without extravagance and without waste. On that point I submit the explanations that have been given are not sufficient, are not convincing. Now, it has been said by the Hon'ble Sir Arthur Anderson that there were difficulties in obtaining supplies of railway materials within the past three years. Naturally. And he hopes that those difficulties will be surmounted. I join in that hope most ardently. We do need railway development, and I hope that those difficulties will be surmounted to a large extent. But is there a reasonable guarantee that those difficulties will be surmounted to the extent of justifying the expenditure which is provided for without involving waste and extravagance? That is the point which is before the Council. I submit that nothing that I have heard satisfies me that extravagance and waste will be avoided. Therefore, Sir, all remarks pointing to the urgency of railways, to the need of railways and more railways, and to the benefits which are to be derived from those railways, do not touch the main point which has been raised by the Resolution. I hope that I will hear something more before the Resolution is put to the vote. There is one other aspect to which I would invite the attention of this Council. The opposition of some of us Indian Members to the extension of railway programme is not properly appreciated by my European friends in the country. In other countries where you have railway systems, the railways are worked more economically and with more benefit. Thus Holland has paid up every pice of what it had sunk in railways. Other countries have derived large profits. Here you are extending the railways system on a basis which is very extravagant, very much more costly than it should be. This has been pointed times without number. Years ago, in the eighties I think or early in the nineties, a member of the geological department deplored that when the Government of India resolved upon having a State railways system, and upon extending the railways in this country, they did not at the same time decide to start iron and steel works in order to manufacture railway material which they required for the purpose of that extension. He pointed out that it cost 50 per cent. more of tonnage charges importing material from England,

[Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya; Sir Thomas Holland.] [10TH MARCH, 1919.]

50 per cent. more than would be required if the material were produced in this country. Now, the experience of this war has shown the work done by the Tata Iron and Steel Works, has shown that material can be supplied, can be obtained in this country. The Government have utilised that material, and I am glad to know that the Government have asked the works to go on supplying materials for the years to come; but the point is that if the Government has appreciated the extension of the railways they ought at the same time to appreciate the duty of doing everything that they can to economise the extension of those railways, and one of the ways is to found workshops, huge workshops where railway materials should be manufactured in the country. That is one point.

"The other point is that in other respects also you have shown nothing that you are doing anything to economise railway construction and management. Complaints have been made many times in this Council and elsewhere that you are not employing indigenous agency to the extent you should in order to have a less costly and equally efficient agency to deal with. Well, I have not heard anything said in this debate, or throughout the Financial Statement debate, which would point to the hope that the Government are alive to the necessity of practising such economies as can be practised and ought justly to be practised in the extension and management of railways. I should like to hear something on that point. These are the reasons why we Indians are so suspicious, rather I would say so anxious, to see that railway extension should not be pushed at a breakneck rate. We do not ignore the benefits of railway extension. We should have more if we had the power which my friends on the official bench have; probably we could show that we could develop railways to a larger extent, with more economy and with greater benefit to the people and with greater satisfaction to everybody concerned. That is the gist of the opposition. Let the Government deal with the proposition as they like."

12-52 P.M.

The Hon'ble Sir Thomas Holland:—"Sir, I propose to deal with the remarks that have been made to-day in the inverse order of the speakers. My Hon'ble friend, Pandit Malaviya, has just drawn your attention to the fact that, as he thinks, there have been extravagances in the management and working of railways. He apparently suggests that if we could change the present management and introduce more Indian experts like himself, these difficulties would disappear"

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya:—"I did not say I was an expert in railway working. The Hon'ble Member is wrong."

The Hon'ble Sir Thomas Holland:—"I will withdraw the suggestion that the Pandit is an expert in railway working, but nevertheless he is ready to give us advice. I should like to point out that we shall not get one step further in this discussion as long as we introduce extraneous questions of this kind, as there is no quantitative unit by which may be determined estimate the economic advantage that will follow if we introduce more Indians into the management and working of Railways. My friend Mr. Hogg from Bombay said it was not sufficient to reject this Resolution. I agree with him; and I hope the patience of the Council will not be exhausted while I attempt the difficult task of making the situation convincingly clear to the Hon'ble Mover. The Hon'ble Mr. Sarma complains that members are not provided with details sufficient to enable them to criticise the details of the Budget. The Annual Administration Report on Railways is one of the most detailed reports of its kind issued; but, if the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma can move a Resolution without knowledge of the facts, it would be quite useless to provide him with any details.

"The questions that have been discussed to-day were discussed last week, and the arguments used to-day were effectively answered last week."

from different points of view. I will not waste the time of the Council by reviewing them. I will not attempt also to review the competing claims of sanitation, of education, industrial development and irrigation. These types of activities fall into one class in this respect, namely, that any money spent, except through qualified agencies and without carefully thought-out plans, must necessarily do more harm than good to the country. The Government are as anxious as any member of this Council to improve and extend both education and sanitation; but it would not be difficult to cite examples to show how costly have been our past errors in both directions.

"My business to-day is not to establish a justification for every constituent of the Budget equation, but to demonstrate to the satisfaction of the Council the necessity of increased expenditure on those activities for which I am for the time being responsible. It is easy to prove, not only that the money allotted is necessary and urgent, but that it can actually be spent judiciously within the year. On Friday last the Financial Secretary, Mr. Howard, drew attention to the fact that we look to the Railways for a revenue of 10 to 11 millions sterling, and he advised us to be careful of the fruitful goose that lays the golden eggs. But it is not the eggs so much as the goose itself that I am now so anxious about. That goose cost just 367 millions sterling. We have been compelled during the war to starve it and we have been compelled even to pluck many of its feathers. The eggs we get in any one year are less important than its depreciation by neglect and ill-treatment.

"To neglect to renew our losses and to repair the damage done to such a valuable property would be justifiable only to win the war. We have won the war, and it would now be criminal disregard of our trust to postpone any longer the repairs and renewals which are necessary to preserve the fertility of the goose. I will not pursue this simile any further, as on the last occasion when I adopted a homely domestic illustration, the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma, in reply, first mutilated it beyond recognition, and then pursued the idea to the borderland of the indelicate.

"Neglect to repair our property means that depreciation sets in, not by arithmetical increments but in geometrical progression. We dare not wait another year, whatever the prices of materials may be. The sum we now propose to spend on railways would be regarded by any business-man as distinctly small.

☛ "You can get some idea of the necessity of repairs and renewals from two sets of figures; the profits compared with the expenditure and the rolling-stock compared with the traffic statistics. The Hon'ble Mr. Sarma this morning has given us certain figures with regard to both, and I will try to make them a little clearer by removing unnecessary details. During the war the net working profits on Indian railways have jumped from £2 millions to £11 millions, which indicates significantly the way in which receipts have outstripped expenditure. If now we take the rolling-stock account and compare it with the traffic figures, we get what a shareholder would regard as equally disquieting results. When the war started we had 186,000 wagons in commission. By last April we had 192,000. If now you allow us to carry out our programme and add 15,000 wagons, we shall have by next April, not 192,000 plus 15,000, but only some 198,000; that is, we have to allow for about 4,000 that certainly will be scrapped this year and more in the next, in addition to the 4,418 that were sent to Mesopotamia. The increase of wagon capacity will thus be about 6 to 7 per cent. The ton-mileage has, however, risen from 15 thousand millions in 1915 to 21 thousand millions in 1918; that is, an increase of 40 per cent. without counting the record year just closing and the year about to open. And still the picture is not quite true; for our annual 'scrap' account henceforward will certainly be in excess of the past: wagons that have been overworked during the war will fall to pieces as rapidly as the rest of us who have also been overworked. These figures in a business concern would naturally give rise to disquieting suspicions in the mind of any wise shareholder. He would naturally expect his Board of Directors to prove that his property is not being torn to pieces, and the future being sacrificed for immediate profits.

"I could give you a similar picture of our 8-9,000 locomotives, but I do not ~~want~~ to weary the Council with figures. What I do want to say for the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma's edification is this: If he had the most elementary political prevision, instead of trying to starve the goose, he would have challenged the Government for neglecting the property which he, as a prospective member of the Reformed Government, hopes to inherit.

"On Friday last the Hon'ble Sir Dinshaw Wacha told us that a year ago he recommended the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma to take up the study of finance; and, based on the improvement which he thinks he now recognises, he predicts that Mr. Sarma might be the Finance Minister of the Reformed Government, possibly in another ten years. Sir Dinshaw's cheerful and charitable optimism is well known to all of us. But, Sir, on the assumption that this time his diagnosis and his prediction are both well-founded, I will take the opportunity of giving Mr. Sarma a formula that may serve to be a useful guide to him in time of doubt. It is this: the Finance Minister who fails to distinguish between what is important for the future and what is absolutely essential to-day, will bring his country to grief in his first year of office. It is the observance of this formula (which is true in business, true in administration and fatally true in war), that forces the Government at this special time to distinguish between Education and Railways and between Sanitation and Railways.

"The expenditure of a relatively large sum on Railways, as compared with Irrigation and Industrial development, is based on another principle only secondary in importance. It has been pointed out in this Council that the railways are already unable to carry our crops and our coal. Few people here realise the great increase of tonnage that follows the development of a relatively small industry. It is not so much the transport of the finished products, which was referred to by one of the speakers on Friday, as the assembly of the raw materials (which weigh much more than the finished products) that throws a burden on the railways. I have not looked up the figures very recently, but I think I can trust my memory in saying that the Bengal Nagpur Railway statistics show that, on account of the Tata Steel Works alone, the ton-mileage of the whole system had increased by 50 per cent. There are gentlemen in this room who will remember, and remember with pain, my refusal to give priority recommendations last year for the plant required for a most desirable industrial enterprise, merely because I knew that the railway concerned could not handle the raw materials to be assembled without the doubling of its track.

"Now, the other business principle which I offer to complete the mental equipment of our future Finance Minister is this: In business administration take care that all parts of the organization are duly balanced. The most economical step towards increasing the strength of the chain is to discover and strengthen its weakest link, and in the industrial development of India especially, the railways at present are carrying as great a burden as they can bear; they form the weak link in our chain.

"It has always struck me, as an outsider and before responsibility had produced its inevitably soothing influence, that one Finance Minister after another till now had failed fully to realise that every rupee spent on our railways also meant subsidising a new industry, adding far more to our wealth than the golden eggs which Mr. Howard counts so anxiously. This battle between the prophets and the financier has been going on since the railhead first stopped at Ranigunj. In my old office at Calcutta will be found a correspondence dated in the early sixties when the first Director of the Geological Survey implored Government to push the rail through the coalfields. He was told to mind his own business and to cease the correspondence; but, being less perfectly disciplined than some of his successors, he delivered a final shot by rashly declaring that, in his opinion, it would pay ultimately to push the railway even as far as Benares! It is difficult to realise now the mental attitude that existed in those days with regard to the railway question, but I am afraid we have always been lagging behind the needs of the country.

"Some of our commercial friends here have never ceased telling the Government that the Railways have hitherto been the limiting factor in commercial progress. I recently noticed, on turning over the products of my early service in India, before Councils were invented and one had time to work and think, a deduction drawn from the study of mineral statistics which subsequent figures, so far as I can ascertain, have confirmed and demonstrated to be sound. Twenty-five years ago the annual output of coal in India was under 3 million tons, while the consumption of Indian coal on railways was just a million tons. Last year the output of coal was over 18 million tons and the consumption on Indian railways under 6 millions. So that the output of Indian coal has risen by six times in the same period. If you study also any intervening year, you will find that the consumption of coal on railways has never been below 28 per cent. and never above 33 per cent. of the total output. This means that the ratio between coal consumed on railways and that used in other coal-consuming industries has remained almost stationary for 25 years, in spite of an increase in both of 600 per cent. I would not say from this that the development of railways has absolutely checked the development of industries, but I do say that the railways have obviously never rashly gone ahead of the coal-consuming industries, and that fact is, I think, significant. I published this conclusion 15 years ago, and was never reprimanded by the Department of Government responsible for the Railway policy. I re-state it now, on behalf of that Department, as a lesson that we should take to heart in considering the Railway policy of the future.

"One of the Hon'ble Members has already drawn attention to the important fact that during the past three years we have spent on our Railway property less than 3 millions a year, against the 12½ million standard which was set by the Mackay Commission. The actual position, however, is far worse than these figures disclose; they take no account of the fact that during that period we have sent away to Mesopotamia 210 engines and 429 coaching vehicles and 4,418 goods wagons. These have to be replaced, in addition to large quantities of rolling-stock that have been damaged by over-work and forced neglect of repairs during the war.

"I regret, therefore, that on behalf of the Railway Department, I cannot undertake to relinquish any part of the money that has been allotted in the Budget for the purpose of preventing further losses on our Railway system. On the other hand, I ought to remind the Hon'ble Mover of the Resolution that when, ten years hence, he proposes a small allotment of say 50 millions for Railways, some member, with an inconveniently long memory, may recall, to his discomfiture, this Resolution of March 10th, 1919. My advice to him is, therefore, to earn merit now and to justify Sir Dinshaw's prediction by acknowledging an error which great men before him have also made, and an error that, I understand, some of them have repented."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma :—"Sir, I am very glad that I have moved this Resolution because the extreme warmth with which the Hon'ble the Commerce Member has been compelled to defend his policy and his measures, convinces me beyond doubt that I am right and the great need for the non-official public to take hereafter some interest in railway administration. Well, I never posed as an expert, and I never in my dreams expected that the Government of India would be so radically modified in the near future as to allow any Indian five thousand times more brilliant than I to occupy those sacred seats which are now occupied by Sir Thomas Holland and others. Therefore I think the Hon'ble Sir Thomas Holland has, for lack of argument, made use of my friend's joke, which I did not take exception to seriously as coming from an elder who has a perfect right to give advice, but I am afraid that at this juncture I shall have to show that perhaps

[Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma.] [10TH MARCH, 1919.]

Sir Thomas Holland is not quite so correct in his diagnosis of railway policy or in the conclusions at which he has arrived as he seems to imagine. There is no need for my defending any position and therefore for feeling anger with the Department or with the gentleman in charge of a department even when he successfully uses his position for the purpose of showing that the materials which his department can furnish him enable him to demolish a non-official member who is devoid of that advice. But, in spite of the great help which Sir Thomas Holland has and which I sought to have placed at the disposal of non-official members, what has the result been? First of all with regard to the remarks about sufficient materials being available in that blue-book, which has not been utilised, may I ask, Sir, whether Sir Thomas Holland has got here the additions by which he proposes to increase the stock by his Budget grant in 1919? The number of wagons which were sent away to Mesopotamia, the number of wagons which he proposes to build in India, the number he proposes to get from England, the cost thereof prior to the war, the cost thereof at present, and the materials which even a more obtuse mind than mine can appreciate, let alone that of the genius shining across there? He says, if I understand rightly, that 186,000 was the number of wagons prior to the war, and 192,000 at the end of the war, that is in 1917-18. There has been some increase, so I take it that the number existing now is larger excluding the number sent away to Mesopotamia, because I find here a number of minuses, so that I take it that in spite of the wagons, materials, etc., that have been sent away to Mesopotamia, we arrive at this result of 192,000. Therefore I for one, trained in less intellectual methods, cannot appreciate the force of the argument that a number of engines have been sent away, a large stock of other kinds, and many goods wagons have been sent away. Of course I can understand that if these were included in the 192,000 there would be very great force in the reasoning. But failing to see that, let us proceed. 186,000 wagons I take it cost about 52 crores of rupees. If these figures are correct and 15,000 wagons are expected to cost 17 crores of rupees that is less than 1-12th, which ought to cost $4\frac{1}{2}$ crores, are to be purchased at 17 crores now. Therefore material which we might have bought for 4 crores is supposed to be bought this year for 17 crores, and Hon'ble Members who question the wisdom of buying so many wagons in the market at such high prices are foolish, are ignorant, are asking for impossible things, are asking for uneconomic expenditure, and are therefore to be placed outside the pale of the law as persons with whom no person who has at heart the true economic and industrial development of the country can have anything to do. It may be that these 15,000 wagons are of a first class type, or it may be that some of them are of very poor quality and open trucks, but these averages will not help us and that is the reason why I said a little light thrown in the Budget Statement as to what kind these 15,000 wagons are would be an advantage. First of all we are not told that it is 15,000. Never mind that. We should then analyse and see whether they would be 1st class, 2nd class or 3rd class carriages or what kind of carriages they are if any portion of the rolling-stock is to be coaching and whether the cost taken is the correct cost. But these are materials which the Hon'ble Member (Sir Thomas Holland) thinks need not be furnished to Hon'ble Members because they are never expected to interest themselves in these matters, and it would be foolish and impertinent of me to ask similar questions of the Hon'ble Member in the midst of the august assembly which rules here. I, therefore, take it that it is about 1-12th that is proposed to be added at a cost normally four times as much as the pre-war cost. It may be that the figures and averages that I have been dealing with may be incorrect, but I think I am perfectly justified in my criticism that the purchase in the market of material at four times its normal cost would be wasteful extravagance, and that I am right to deprecate it. Then it was said, Sir, that we were not entitled to take only the weight of the tonnage into consideration, but also the total mileage run, and if that is taken, 40 per cent. would be the ratio and not 3 per cent. or less that would have to be taken into consideration. In setting out one of the factors in the situation I stated last time distinctly that that is one of the difficulties which meets us and one would like to know how far that difficulty would be minimised in the coming year on account of the cessation of hostile operations, on account of the large numbers of wagons which are being at present utilised and which were utilised last year for military operations and for the carriage of coal connected with the war, being released for ordinary commercial purposes, ~~that~~ is a proposition on which I said some light might be thrown. But I see at the end of the argument we had a lecture on general commercial development and general railway development, but on some of these details asked for the Hon'ble Member thinks that it is not wisdom to throw light. While so, I fail to see how any one, with the most brilliant intellect, can be convinced even now that my proposition was wrongly conceived or was wrongly pressed upon the Government.

"Now, referring to the observations of the Hon'ble Mr. Hogg, I have every sympathy with what he said that we should demonstrate in a practical manner that we have at heart the commercial and industrial railway development of the country and not merely profess it in theory. Well, if the Hon'ble Mr. Hogg had thrown light upon any of the difficulties which I expressed strongly both on the last and on the present occasion and helped me in a solution thereof instead of indulging in general observations, I should have been extremely thankful to him, and I should have said certainly I am in the wrong, if I felt so, but, without doing so, he cannot expect us to follow him. We are not ignoring, and I for one am not ignoring, that in the future the cost of materials is likely to be much larger than it has been in the past. But without the Legislative Council, without the country, having an opportunity of deciding, after expert investigation of the subject, as to what its future policy should be having regard to other needs, are we to have practically the inception of a new policy embarked on in this fashion? My Hon'ble friend says that my Resolution must be rejected not only because it denies the grant of £25 millions this year, but because it would in principle be rejecting the grant of another £25 millions in future. I humbly submit that it was for that very reason I have asked this Council at this stage to reject this amount of £25 millions, because we should otherwise be indirectly committing the Government to the policy. If we are to buy the same material for nearly twice the money, then certainly the proposition is an arguable one. But it will have to be considered whether we should borrow at such a high rate of interest as 5½ or 6 per cent., borrow money competing with those who wish to utilise it for the reconstruction of Europe or wait until the industrial development of this country can produce the material more cheaply and the interest rate goes down. These are questions which ought to lead us to pause before we reject this Resolution in a light-hearted fashion. I for one protest against incurring an enormous expenditure of £25 millions year after year at these high prices without an adequate inquiry, and therefore I submit that that argument should not be used during the current year for the purpose of rejecting my Resolution.

"Then, my friend the Hon'ble Mr. Shafi, drew a doleful picture with regard to trade in his own province. I might draw an even more doleful picture of what is taking place in my own part of the country; because if any one is feeling the effects of the shortage of wagons it is my unhappy district and my unhappy province, which is too far, too distant from Delhi to have its cries heard. I have alluded to the fact that the total cost of goods wagons on the Southern Mahratta Railway is only 97 lakhs against more than 62 crores, in more favoured provinces, and I have said in a way that in my district, owing to the wagon difficulty, traffic is suspended and we cannot import rice into it. I realise fully the difficulties of agriculturists and others. I realise them and if in spite of that I move this Resolution it is not because I am oblivious of all this, but because I want to have this policy threshed out and to understand clearly whether we are getting our money's worth for the money we are going to spend. I have not been convinced by the arguments that have been advanced by the other side, and I must press my Resolution."

The Hon'ble the Vice-President:—" Does the Hon'ble Member in charge desire to make any final observations ? "

The Hon'ble Sir Thomas Holland:—" No, Sir. The Hon'ble Mr. Sarma, I think, has the right of final reply."

The motion was put and negatived.

[At this stage the Council adjourned for Lunch till 2-30 P.M.]

FINANCIAL STATEMENT, 1919-20.

2-34 P.M.

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—" Sir, I beg to introduce the following heads of the Financial Statement for 1919-20 :—

Revenue.	Expenditure.
Registration.	Registration.
Jails.	General Administration.
Police.	Courts of Law.
Medical.	Jails.
	Police.
	Medical.

"In introducing the heads of the Financial Statement with which the Home Department has to deal, there is really little that I have to say except on one or two heads. Under the head 'Police' there is, however, an important item to which I should draw attention, namely, the reorganization in the pay and grading of the Imperial Police. This has recently been sanctioned by the Secretary of State. The new scheme was published recently in the newspapers and I need not explain it in detail. It takes effect from the 1st of January 1919. The bulk of the cost will, I believe, be borne by the Provinces, and I understand that in the current year the great part if not the whole will be met by savings under other heads. I hope that this change will be accepted generally as giving a living wage to men who have deserved very well by the country for many years and have been labouring under a severe strain during the years of the war. If Hon'ble Members will look at paras. 95 and 96 of the explanatory memorandum which is annexed to the Budget, they will see also that the lower ranks of the police have been benefited. Indeed for some years we have been pursuing this policy of doing what is possible to better conditions in the lower ranks of the police. It may interest Hon'ble Members to know that during the years 1910 to 1917 while the expenditure on the Imperial Police rose by less than five lakhs of rupees, that on the grade of inspector and sub-inspector and the lower grades rose by 75 lakhs. I believe that in many cases this expenditure has been accompanied by a reduction in the numbers.

"Another subject to which I wish to draw the attention of this Council relates to the head 'Jail.' About five years ago, my predecessor announced that it was the intention of Government to constitute a Jail Commission to inquire into the question of jail administration, and see what was needed to bring it up to modern ideas. Unfortunately the war intervened and year after year we have had to abandon this project in which my predecessor and if I may say so I myself have taken a great interest. This year I am glad to be able to say that we propose to undertake this work. The constitution of the Committee has not yet been finally settled, but it is hoped that it will begin its operations within two or three months. It will include, besides the chairman, two Inspectors-General of Prisons, a prison expert of standing from England, two Indian non-official gentlemen and probably one high administrative official. It is intended that the Committee shall assemble in England, if necessary, though I doubt if it will be necessary, visit America and then return to India and make its report here as early as possible. We expect great results from this commission. I am particularly glad that the work has not been delayed any longer, because we have very definite evidence in the administrative reports that reach us of the necessity for considerable modifications in our present system.

“Under the head of ‘Law and Justice’ there are only two matters to which I should like to draw the attention of Council. The first is the conversion of the Punjab Chief Court into a High Court, which will take effect from the 1st of April next. I believe that this will be a subject for much gratification to many Hon’ble Members here. The other matter connected with law and justice is a permanent increase in the number of civil Courts in the Madras Presidency. We have recommended to the Secretary of State that substantial additions should be made in the number of permanent subordinate Judges and Munsifs at a cost of 1½ lakhs a year. My recollection is that a large number of officers are employed now on a temporary basis, and this is not at all a satisfactory system.

“There is only one other matter to which I need refer at all, and that is the great increase which has taken place in the cost of living generally during the last few years. The purchasing power of the rupee has fallen, and there appears to be little prospect of normal conditions being restored. The significance of this is that salaries both of the superior and inferior services which have hitherto been considered adequate are so no longer, and we constantly have to sanction large sums to improve the emoluments, up to now mainly of lower paid servants of Government. In Bombay, this has been a frequent necessity both in the case of the police and in the case of other services. In some cases the improvements have taken the form of temporary allowances, such as grain compensation and war compensation allowances. In some cases we have made permanent additions to the salaries. The case of the superior services, Imperial and Provincial, is a matter of urgency with which we must deal as soon as possible. In these circumstances, it is right I should warn the Council in regard both to the superior and the inferior services that there is a possibility of the cost of administration rising very considerably.”

RESOLUTION RE APPOINTMENT OF A MIXED COMMITTEE TO INQUIRE INTO THE ADMINISTRATION OF THE DELHI PROVINCE.

The Hon’ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda:—“Sir, I beg to 2-10 p.m. move the following Resolution:—

‘This Council recommends to the Governor General in Council that the surplus in the Budget Estimate for 1919-20 be reduced by Rs. 10,000 in order to provide for the appointment of a mixed Committee to inquire into the administration of the Delhi Province.’

“The first thing that may probably strike some Hon’ble Members of the Council is why should a person from distant Assam take upon himself to move a Resolution about Delhi. Apart from the fact that every member of the Council is a member of the whole of India, there is no representative of Delhi on the Council, and unless members from outside take up questions about Delhi they will not be placed before the Council at all. This in fact is my apology for bringing the subject forward. Delhi, as the Council are aware, is the Imperial city, the official capital of India, formed part of the late Delhi Division of the Punjab. It was cut off from the Punjab to form the Imperial enclave in 1912 in accordance with the announcement made at the Durbar on the model of Washington. The idea was to keep the Government of India apart from any Provincial Government. The connection of the Government of India with a Provincial Government was characterised in the Durbar Despatch as 'bad for the Government of India and bad for the Provincial Government.'

" I will now respectfully invite the Council to consider how far that idea has been kept in view ; to see whether we have not actually drifted far away from that idea, to see whether while the Government of India has come away from Calcutta to avoid connection with the Provincial Government whether a new Provincial Government has not sprung up in its midst, in close proximity to, and in intimate connection with it, a Provincial Government essentially entirely bureaucratic in nature but bereft of the benefits which the people enjoy in the provinces. The province of Delhi, since it must be called a province, is the smallest in size of any province. It is only 64 miles in length and 18 broad and is indeed very small. The income must necessarily be small, it is only 20 lakhs, I believe. But the bureaucratic administration that has gradually been built up is disproportionately top heavy, consisting as it does of a large number of highly paid officials. We have a Chief Commissioner, his Personal Assistant, a Deputy Commissioner, an additional Magistrate, a paid Municipal Secretary and a District Judge ; all belonging to or drawing emoluments of the I. C. S. The Deputy Commissioner is a military man. There are two Superintendents of Police with a more than sufficient staff of police, both regular and C. I. D., and quite a host of members of the Punjab Provincial Service. Thus it is obvious we have the strongest bureaucracy of any Province in India. Surely this could not have been intended when it was resolved to have an Imperial enclave, isolated from any Provincial Government. If we are to have another Provincial Government intertwined as it were with the Government of India, what is the point in having come away from Calcutta ? On the other hand, what have the people got, what benefits have they derived, what privileges have been conferred on the people along with the distinction of being the citizens of the Imperial city ? In the first place the highest civic right open to an Indian now, the right of occupying a seat on a Legislative Council, the privilege of being associated with the Ruler in the administration of the province is denied to a citizen of Delhi and has in fact been taken away from him. Though the Members of the Legislative Council possess no real power there is no doubt the privilege such as it is highly valued. Along with the rights of sitting in the Council is of course the right of electing a representative to the Council. These rights the people of Delhi possessed before. The Delhi Division along with Umballa had the right of electing a member of the Punjab Legislative Council and a well-known and highly respected citizen of Delhi, Rai Bahadur Lala Sultan Singh, was a member of the Punjab Legislative Council. The people of Delhi no longer possess this right. You may say Delhi is too small an area to have a Provincial Legislative Council ; it may be so, I have no mind to dispute it at the present moment, but only point out the consequence which has automatically followed from the carving out of the Imperial enclave out of the Punjab. In the next place, though it is the Imperial city and the Imperial Council sits here, Delhi has no right to send a representative to this Imperial Council. Here again you will say there is no constituency in Delhi to be represented on this Council. Here again I say I will not join issue with you beyond referring to the bare fact. It is, however, permissible to call attention in passing to the fact that the Central Provinces had the right of having a representative on this Council before the formation of the Provincial Legislative Council. Thus the right of ventilating administrative and other grievances in the Council is denied to the people of Delhi, and we from outside have to take upon ourselves the task of bringing up questions about Delhi in this Council. That is my apology for moving this Resolution to-day as I have already said. Thus there being no Legislature to deal with provincial questions, no laws can of course be enacted here. You will inquire how are the laws passed ? I say no laws are passed for Delhi at all. Punjab laws are engrafted on Delhi at the discretion of the administration without the people knowing anything at all, far less being consulted. The next question is that of local self-government. No doubt there is a Municipality in Delhi, the Deputy Commissioner is ex-officio Chairman, and half the number of Members is nominated. Apart from this unprogressive constitution of the Board, it has a very limited jurisdiction being confined within the city walls. There are three other bodies called the Notified Area Committees—a rather mystifying name, which are in fact municipalities as regards other portions of Delhi. There is one for the Civil Station, that is the Imperial city, where we are which is under the jurisdiction of one Notified Area Committee which consists of three European officials and a nominated Indian. Thus, Sir, I can say that in Delhi representative institutions are at a very heavy discount. What an anomaly ! A cruel irony of fate !

“Next comes the question of the administration of justice and the Services. The highest Court of Appeal, Civil and Criminal, is the Chief Court of the Punjab, which, as we have just heard from the Hon'ble the Home Member with great satisfaction, is going to be raised to the status of a Chartered High Court from the 1st of April next. Now unlike the High Court at Patna, where the Hon'ble Judges hold circuit Courts in Orissa, which is a part of the province, here there does not seem to be any intention of having any circuit Court in Delhi though it is a different province. Therefore the people of Delhi have always to go to the Punjab Chief Court in appeal cases.

“Then as regards the services, the heads of all departments are in the Punjab. There is no provincial service in Delhi, and these provincial services from the Indian point of view are the most important services which give openings to the educated community, so the educated people in Delhi have no chance of getting any entry into the public services. It is well known, Sir, that if qualified candidates from Delhi apply in the Punjab for service, they are plainly told that they have no locus standi because they belong to a different province.

“Next take the question of education. There is no Government College, nor even a University, perhaps no material for a University either. The people of Delhi have got to be content with two seats by nomination on the Senate of the Punjab University out of 80. I understand there are nine colleges under the Punjab University outside Delhi, and there are three colleges in Delhi, therefore proportionately they ought to get at least one-fourth of the total number of seats on the Senate of the Punjab University.

“Then, Sir, there is no Legislative Council, there is no Advisory Board whatsoever of any kind reflecting educated public opinion which could give independent, responsible advice to the administration on public questions. There is thus no means whatever of bringing the pressure of public opinion to bear on the administration, and the Chief Commissioner of Delhi and the Chief Engineer are thus the sole arbiters of Delhi and of the greater Delhi that is in the making. They have left to their own unfettered discretion, to find as best they can what they take to be the public opinion. That means that it is and must always be a matter of personal equation.

“This being the position, there being no healthy check whatsoever which enlightened and independent public opinion everywhere exerts on the administration, it will be a marvel, it would be strange, if what has happened at other places, at other times under similar circumstances would not happen, does not happen and will not happen in Delhi. On the other hand, Sir, there being not the slightest chance of any public opinion exerting any influence over the local administration there are bound to be occasions of executive high-handedness, of improper interference with, of undue indifference to, questions affecting personal liberty, of public right of speech and public right of action, and I can give you, Sir, any number of instances of this kind. But I am afraid you will call upon me to finish my speech within the time-limit, and I shall therefore quote only a few instances.

"The first point to which I wish to invite the attention of the Council is that in this Imperial city the right of public meetings has been taken away by an order of the Deputy Commissioner purporting to be passed under the Police Act of 1861. Some time in September last orders were passed under section 30 of the Police Act calling upon the conveners of public meetings to obtain licenses from the Superintendent of Police to hold public meetings at any place of public resort specifying the occasion for which such meetings are held, the object for which the meeting is held, and so far as possible the names of the speakers. My submission is, Sir, that these orders are ultra vires. I submit that it was never intended by this section to restrict the right to hold public meetings. I shall read the section to the Council. It is this. 'That a District Superintendent or Assistant District Superintendent of Police may, as occasion requires, direct the conduct of all assemblies and processions on the public roads, or in the public streets or thoroughfares, and prescribe the routes by which and the times at which such processions may pass.' I call the attention of the Council to the words 'public roads, public streets or thoroughfares.' Then further it is said in the Act 'he (that is the District Superintendent or Assistant Superintendent of Police) may also, on being satisfied that it is intended by any person or class of persons to convene or collect an assembly, in any such road, street or thoroughfare, or to form a procession which would, in the judgment of the Magistrate of the District, or of the subdivision of a district, if uncontrolled, be likely to cause a breach of the peace, require by general or special notice that the persons convening or collecting such assembly or directing or promoting such procession shall apply for a license.'

"Sir, my submission is that these orders under this section are ultra vires. Action under this section could not possibly include a public meeting held at a public place. The section speaks of 'public roads, thoroughfares and streets', and if the Council will bear with me for a moment I shall show how the original section stood. The words originally framed were 'place not being a private house or place of worship.' That is to say, if anybody wanted to convene a meeting or assembly at a place which was not a private house or a place of worship, he had to take a license. The words being found capable of being misunderstood, the Select Committee substituted the words which are now embodied in the section. The words in the section relate only to processions or things of that kind, and it is obvious that it was never intended to restrict the right to hold public meetings in a public place. But in this Imperial city, Sir, action has been taken under this section and public meetings were prohibited, with the result that persons wishing to hold meetings had to hold them in private houses.

"Not only this, but when the Secretary of State came here, Sir, the Local Government prohibited all public meetings in public places. On these orders being passed, Mr. Asaf Ali, a well-known gentleman of the city, in company with the Joint Secretary of the Home Rule League, interviewed the Deputy Commissioner with reference to their application for leave to hold a series of meetings, and Colonel Beadon is reported to have said (I am quoting the Bombay Chronicle of the 22nd December, 1917, which, so far as I know, has never been contradicted) :—

'The Government do not want any tamasha during the Secretary of State's stay. He further regretted the unwisdom of the Government in allowing Mr. Montagu any deputations at all.'

"Sir, even assuming that such an order could be passed, my submission is that such an order ought not to have been passed. I do not think such an order was passed anywhere else during the war. That is how the status of the citizens of Delhi have been raised.

"Then, there is a well-known incident in connection with the Ramlila procession of 1917. The Hindus from time immemorial have been celebrating the Ramlila during the Dussera festival. It is a religious institution, not a tamasha as the Deputy Commissioner described it when disposing of the application for a license. Ramlila is celebrated for nine days in the month of Asauj, corresponding with the month of October. In 1917, it was to take place between the 17th and 26th of October, and the Mohurrum procession of Mondhi and tazias, which the Shiah Moslems—to the resentment of the Sunnis—celebrate, was fixed to take place on the 24th and 27th of October. It was found that on one of these days it would coincide with the Ramlila procession which would end on the 26th. On this day both the processions would have a small part of the route—about half a furlong I am told—in common, namely, that lying between the Ajmer Gate and Barh Shabbala. To avoid any possibility of friction, however remote it might be, some of the leading Hindu and Moslem citizens of Delhi met and by common consent prepared a time sheet for both the processions; and a deputation of 12 gentlemen, 5 Hindus and 7 Mussalmans, including the two headmen of the Shiah community, handed this to the Deputy Commissioner on the 23rd August. No order was then passed. It became known, however, that the Deputy Commissioner on the 15th September called some of the Hindus and told them that it would not do; they must have a different route, which excepting a small part was uninhabited. The Hindus met and considered the matter and decided that the proposal of the Deputy Commissioner would not suit them. There were also mass meetings of Hindus and Moslems at which thousands of Moslems attended who condemned the Deputy Commissioner's proposal as unnecessary interference with the rights of the people, and held that there was no danger of disturbance if the Ramlila and Mohurrum processions were to pass by the common route. But the authorities paid no heed to all this and as no written order was passed by the Deputy Commissioner, the Ramlila Committee on the 11th of October filed a formal application for a license, and the Deputy Commissioner added insult to injury to the Hindu feelings by the terms of the order he passed. On the 16th of October the Ramlila Committee then approached the Chief Commissioner, the Hon'ble Mr. Hailey, who I am pleased to find has taken his seat in the Council again to-day. They got stones in place of the bread they asked for, as he dismissed them summarily with caustic remarks. The result was that no procession was taken out, and as a result of this disregard of Hindu feelings, the Hindu shopkeepers as a protest and to mark their sense of grief, closed their shops for nine days, and the resentment was deepened and everybody was simply bewildered when they saw artillery parading the streets of Delhi and the cavalry being drafted out to keep the peace. Sir, that is how the Imperial city was administered in October 1917. That the action of the authorities was unjustifiable is shown conclusively by the fact that in 1918, under exactly similar conditions, the two processions of Ramlila and Mohurrum passed on the same route, not on one day as would have happened in 1917, but on two days, and there was not the slightest hitch or disturbance.

"Then, Sir, take another instance in Delhi. There is a Hindu girls' school called the Indraprastha Girls' School. It used to get a subsidy of Rs. 200 a month. There was a lady called Miss Gmeiner as Lady Superintendent in charge of it. She formed a branch of the Home Rule League in Delhi and came and informed the Chief Commissioner of this, and the result was that the Chief Commissioner called upon the School Managing Committee either to part with Miss Gmeiner's services or do without the grant. They would not part with the services of Miss Gmeiner and the grant was withdrawn. Not only that, but privileges due to the students were withheld. The students of Delhi are allowed one day a week to visit the gardens of the Fort and this right was also denied to the students. On this matter I put a number of questions in this Council on the 24th of September 1917 and the questions were practically all admitted, as the Council will see. I will read them out:—

'(a) Is there a girls' school in Delhi called the Indraprastha Girls' School established in 1904, and is it a fact that Miss Gmeiner was Lady Superintendent thereof from 1905 and that last year this school with an enrolment of 350 girls was raised to the status of a High School, and that the school was receiving a grant-in-aid of Rs. 200 a month?

[Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda; Mr. Srinivasa Sastri; Sir William Vincent; The Vice-President.] [16TH MARCH, 1919.]

(b) Is it a fact that after the opening of a Branch Home Rule League at Delhi, the grant-in-aid has been withdrawn on the ground that the Lady Superintendent, Miss Gmeiner, had joined the League and that she must withdraw either from the school or the League?

(c) Is it a fact that at the same time the payment of the scholarship money which was then overdue was also withheld?

(d) Is it a fact that the said school is the largest girls' school in Delhi and that though all other schools were given one evening in the week to visit the Delhi Fort Gardens, no day was allotted to it?

(e) Is it a fact that the Lady Superintendent and the Honorary Secretary of the School Committee gave an assurance to the Chief Commissioner that the Home Rule League is quite apart from the school and that no member of the School Committee nor any person connected with the school besides Miss Gmeiner and an Honorary worker, Miss Priest, had anything whatever to do with the Home Rule League?

"Then, Sir, the next point is this. Miss Gmeiner opened a Home Rule reading-room and library and what happened in regard to this library will be seen from the question I put the same day, which was admitted by the Hon'ble Home Member :—

(a) Is it a fact :—

(i) that a reading-room called the Home Rule Reading-room was lately opened at Delhi? and

(ii) that the management of the reading-room complained of harassment at the hands of the Criminal Investigation Department, not only by crowding the room but making it a rule to follow and harass visitors so as to make them discontinue their visits?

(b) If so, was any inquiry made about the complaint?"

The Home Member admitted this.

The Hon'ble Mr. Srinivasa Sastri :—" Does the Hon'ble Member mean that the Home Member admitted the question or that he admitted the facts?"

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—" That is what I wish to know too."

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda :—" I will quote the answer."

The Hon'ble the Vice-President :— I would advise the Hon'ble Member not to quote it at great length because he has only 2½ minutes left."

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda :—" The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent replied :—' (a) The fact is as stated.' But I need not repeat the answer. I shall refer only to one other matter as an instance of how educated public opinion is flouted by the local authorities. It is in connection with the public procession in honour of the President Elect of the Indian National Congress in December last. The route that was applied for by the Reception Committee is the route that is daily taken by processions without any hitch. There was also another reason why the Reception Committee selected this route. It lay through streets lined on both sides by houses, the owners of which were most of them members of the Reception Committee, and it was their desire that the procession should pass that way. But it was not to the liking or pleasure of the Police Superintendent, who said it would look too much like 'A State Entry:—' I quote what I understand were the gentleman's own words—and he prescribed a route which lay through roads where there were no inhabited houses but only railway godowns, the building of a cinema show, and houses occupied by local prostitutes. The Reception Committee were not prepared to accept this route. They then applied to the Deputy Commissioner, and having failed to obtain a favourable decision from him, they approached the officiating Chief Commissioner. This is what the Chief Commissioner replied :—

‘Such assemblies and processions are, under sections 30—33 of the Police Act of 1861, entirely subject to the general control of the Magistrate of the District exercised through the District Superintendent of Police. The law does not contemplate any interferences by any superior executive authority with the exercise of the responsibility thus placed upon the District Magistrate.’

The Head of the Province will not look into the matter even though there was an improper exercise of the discretion of the District Magistrate

The Hon'ble the Vice-President :—“I must ask the Hon'ble Member to bring his remarks to a close, as he has been speaking for half an hour already.”

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda :—“I will, Sir. These are the grounds on which, I submit, there ought to be an inquiry of the kind my Resolution suggests.”

The Hon'ble Mr. W. J. Reid :—“Sir, I come from the same 3-14 P.M. remote Province as the Hon'ble Mover of this Resolution, and we live in the same mofussil town. The Hon'ble Mover is the Chairman of the Municipality that looks after the affairs of that town. He has filled that honourable position for many years and is therefore eminently qualified as a critic in matters municipal. In the course of his speech I understood him to take strong exception to the system under which certain members of the Delhi Municipality are nominated. That system or some modification of it is in force in our own Province, and I hope the Hon'ble Mover's condemnation of it is not universal.....”

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda :—“Just one word, Sir. What I said was this, that on the Delhi Municipality half the members are nominated, which makes it a most unprogressive body. In our Municipality only one-third of the members are nominated.”

The Hon'ble Mr. W. J. Reid :—“I said, Sir, that in Assam the system in a modified form is in force. That is not the point which I wished to make. The Hon'ble Member himself is at the present moment a Municipal Commissioner by the way of nomination. When the last elections were held an ungrateful constituency refused to elect him as their Ward Commissioner. I regarded this as a public calamity because the Hon'ble Member had for many years been an admirable Chairman of the Municipality and persuaded him to accept a nomination, which he did. I would only suggest, Sir, that a system which has done so well for the people of Silchar cannot be an entirely bad system.”

The Hon'ble Khan Bahadur Mian Muhammad Shafi :— 3-16 P.M.
“Sir, I have no desire to intervene in this combat between the champion of Delhi and whoever is going to champion the cause of the Government in this matter. But there is one error—and to my mind a very grave error—in the figures and in the claim based on those figures, which, on behalf of the rest of the Punjab, it is my duty to invite the attention of this Hon'ble Council to. My learned and Hon'ble friend claimed that there being three colleges in Delhi, Delhi was entitled to 25 per cent. of the seats on the Senate of the Punjab University. According to him there are only nine colleges outside Delhi. I find on a very hasty calculation of the number of colleges in our Province that there are altogether twenty-one colleges in the Punjab. That is to say, the colleges at Delhi number only one-seventh of the total number of colleges in the whole province. If the Government were to distribute the seats on the Senate of the University only between the towns which happened to possess colleges in proportion to the number of colleges which those towns do possess, I do not know how the educational interests of the rest of the Province could find representation on the Senate of the University. For if this principle were to be adopted, there are eight colleges in Lahore and Lahore ought to have 8 by 21 of the total number of seats on the Senate of the University; and similarly the other towns, whether they have two or whether they have three or whether they have one, college, ought to have proportional representation on that principle, and the rest of the entire population of the Punjab and its educational interests, according to the principle, ought to go entirely unrepresented. That is the fallacy of my Hon'ble friend in regard to this particular matter which I want to point out to this Council. I am not concerned in the combat itself between the Delhi town and the Delhi Government. That is a matter which I have no doubt the champions on the two sides will fight out among themselves."

3-19 P.M.

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"Sir, the Hon'ble Member began with an apology for putting himself forward as a champion for Delhi. If I may say so, no apology was needed. Delhi is indeed to be congratulated on having secured so eloquent an advocate of its cause. It is moreover correct that there is no direct representation of the Province of Delhi on this Council, and having regard to the limited number of members, I think Hon'ble Members will admit that any such representation is impossible. At the same time, when any public question is agitated in the Province, I have always found that there were numbers of non-official Members ready to take it up and make representations about it to this Council; and I do not think that it can be said that the pressure of public opinion in the city of Delhi is not felt as much as it is elsewhere. In any case, I submit that there is scarcely any room for an inquiry by a Committee into this question of representation, because we know that in the Report on Reforms recently prepared by His Excellency the Viceroy and the Secretary of State, provision has been made for the representation of Delhi; and Lord Southborough's Committee—on which I believe some Hon'ble Members here also served—has no doubt considered that question in connection with the franchise for the Legislative Assembly, mention this as indicating the absence of any need for a separate Committee to inquire into a matter which has already been fully investigated. As a matter of fact, the population of Delhi being what it is, I think the Hon'ble Member would himself admit that there is no reason why it should be represented in this Council at present. Nor can it be maintained that being outside the Punjab it is entitled to any representation in the Punjab Council. It is an unfortunate position, but as I explained it will possibly be rectified—or at any rate, it has been fully inquired into recently.

"The Hon'ble Member complained of the laws that were in force in Delhi. Sir, I speak merely from memory, but I believe most of the laws that are in force in this province are those which have come down from the time when Delhi formed part of the Punjab, and had a representative in the Punjab Council or are laws which would have applied to it whether this Province had remained inside or outside the Punjab. I may be wrong: as I said, I am speaking from memory; but I think this statement is correct as to most of the laws.

"The Hon'ble Mr. Chanda then made references to the question of municipal administration, on which he suggested an inquiry was needed. This is a matter really for my Hon'ble colleague on my left (Sir Sankaran Nair) to deal with, and I should be hardly justified in touching on it except to suggest to the Council that it is unnecessary to discuss the appointment of a Committee of inquiry to investigate a matter of this kind before other and simpler methods of dealing with it have been tried. I am quite sure my Hon'ble colleague will be the first to pay attention to any representation that may be made to him in the matter. Then I am told that another reason for an inquiry is that there is no circuit Court of the Chief Court or High Court at Delhi. Sir, if any complaints had been made to the Home Department on this matter, they would have been inquired into. To the best of my knowledge no such complaints have been made. There is a circuit Court in Cuttack, in the province of Bihar and Orissa, but there are those who doubt if it is really a great benefit, and if there are advantages there are also certainly corresponding disadvantages, as I think some of those who come from that province will admit. In the absence, however, of any express request by responsible people in Delhi for a circuit Court here I urge that no case for the appointment of a Committee to inquire into this matter has been made out. May I remind Hon'ble Members in this connection that we have recently had rather a surfeit of these reports. We have reports of Committees on industries, a report of a Committee on legislation, which is now pending before this Council, a report on reforms which gave us a good deal of work, and we are now threatened with a report on University education which is likely, I believe, to run to 2,000 pages. I think that the Hon'ble Member would scarcely wish to add to the number of reports of that kind.

[Sir William Vincent; Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda; The Vice-President.]

"There is another reason why no inquiry by a Committee is necessary into the administrative matters to which he refers. I listened with some care to the complaints that have been made of the administration of Delhi. Let me begin with that regarding public meetings. The order referred to was made in October, 1917, that is about 18 months ago, and I do not know even if it is in force now. I am quite prepared to have inquiries made as to whether that order is in force, or as to whether any necessity exists for keeping it in force; but had there been any real cause for inquiry, I submit to the Council that it is reasonable to suppose that we should have heard of it sometime earlier than 18 months after the order, and that it is unnecessary now to have an inquiry into so old a matter. At the same time I am quite prepared to have the question which the Hon'ble Member has raised examined.

"Similarly, with the Ramlila procession of 1917. That is, I believe, a matter also about a year and a half old. Am I correct in that?"

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda:—"Yes, that is

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"Yes, October, 1917. I should have thought that if there had been any real police or executive zulum the Hon'ble Member or somebody else—Delhi is never lacking in persons ready to take up these questions—would have brought forward a Resolution in this Council dealing with the matter at the time, in which case we should have had a full debate on the question, and I should have been in a position to answer it.....

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda:—"There was no Council sitting at that time; it was in October."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"I will ask the Hon'ble Member to remember that there was a Council sitting in January and at that time.....

The Hon'ble the Vice-President:—"I think the Hon'ble Member means that it takes a long time for news to get from here to Assam."

[Sir William Vincent; Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda.] [10TH MARCH, 1919.]

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"The Council met in January, and if the Hon'ble Member had wished he could have brought it up then....."

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda:—"6th February was the first meeting."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"It is very difficult to speak if I am subjected to constant interruptions. But I still submit that there was ample time in the cold weather Sessions last year in which the Hon'ble Member could with ease, as was done by the Hon'ble Mr. Banerjea, put a question or have brought this matter to the notice of Council by means of a Resolution. We had a full report on it at the time and the information we received was that on a previous occasion the Ramlila and the Muharrum festivals had clashed with the result that there was a very serious riot, details of which are recorded. In consequence of that it was decided that no procession should pass through the Chandni Chowk in subsequent years.

"In 1915, a meeting was held of leading Hindus, Muhammadans, Sikhs and Bengalis, and after protracted discussions and adjournment of the matter for a month, the approved scheme of routes, as agreed on at the second meeting, was embodied in an order issued by District Magistrate which was communicated to all the parties. The revised scheme provided that no Hindu procession should pass either the Jumma Masjid or the Fatehpuri Mosque, but as a compensation the Hindus obtained a much more suitable and lucrative route, namely, through the Chandi Chowk and Egerton Road. This arrangement was intended to hold good for normal years, but the District Magistrate recorded that the general sense of the meeting was that if in future years the dates of the Muharrum and the Ramlila were to clash, the latter might suitably proceed, via the Dariba, the Chandi Chowk, the Queen's Garden and Dufferin Bridge to the Tis Hazari Maidan. Well, in 1917, the dates of these two processions did clash. Meetings were held, every possible attempt was made to arrive at a satisfactory understanding, and in the end Colonel Beadon, the Deputy Commissioner, gave the Ramlila Committee a choice of two courses, namely, either to celebrate the festival throughout on the alternative route described above, i.e., ending up on the Tis Hazari Maidan, or to maintain the old route ending up at the Shaji tank. There were detailed inquiries into the matter, and the local authorities did the best they could to meet the wishes of all concerned. I submit it would be idle after 18 months to start an inquiry into a thing of that kind.

"The other matter to which the Hon'ble Member referred, I think, was in connection with the Home Rule League Reading Room at Delhi. The facts are that a question to which Mr. Chanda has referred was asked in this Council and I read it and the answer.

Question—

(a) 'Is it a fact—

- (i) that a reading room called the Home Rule Reading Room was lately opened at Delhi, and
- (ii) that the management of the reading room complained of harassment at the hands of the Criminal Investigation Department, not only by crowding the room but making it a rule to follow and harass visitors so as to make them discontinue their visits?

(b) If so, was any inquiry made about the complaint?'

[10TH MARCH, 1919.] [Sir William Vincent ; Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda ; Mr. H. Sharp.]

Reply—

(a) (i) The fact is as stated.

(a) (ii) and (b) The management have made no complaint either to the Chief Commissioner or to other local authorities of harassment by the Criminal Investigation Department.

I think perhaps it would have been a little fairer if he had read the answer in full."

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda :—" I am sorry."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—" I am glad to hear the Hon'ble Member say so. As no complaint was made at the time it is a little unreasonable to expect that an inquiry should be made now. As to the complaints about the last Congress I am informed that large public processions are not allowed to pass a particular mosque—I am not very distinct about the point—I think it is called the Fatehpuri Mosque, as there is always a fear of a breach of the peace there. The District Magistrate went out of his way however to arrange another route for the processions through Queen's Road, through Chandni Chowk by the clock tower and past the Congress Pandal. Everything that was reasonable was indeed done. I submit, Sir, that no case has been made out for an elaborate inquiry into matters of this kind many of which are now dead matters."

The Hon'ble Mr. H. Sharp :—" Sir, the Hon'ble the Home Member said that the questions of municipal administration in Delhi were a matter for the Education Department. I do not stand here as a champion of nomination. In May of last year the Government of India issued a Resolution dealing with this and other matters of local self-government. That Resolution made clear the attitude of the Government of India towards nominated members in municipalities. Mr. Reid has made clear what Mr. Chanda's attitude is. 3-33 P.M.

" I confess I shudder to plunge into these local matters and to enter into competition with the Hon'ble Mr. Chanda after the fascinating glimpse which he afforded us on Saturday afternoon into the penetralia of provincial administration. But it is necessary for me to point out that the facts on which Mr. Chanda has based some of his statements appear to be incorrect, or at least out-of-date.

" I understood Mr. Chanda to say that in the Municipal Committee of Delhi half the members were nominated and that the Notified Area Committee consisted of three European officials and one nominated Indian.

" As regards the Municipal Committee, the fact is that the number of elected members equals the number of ex-officio and nominated members taken together on paper. But this is only on paper. For recently two among the nominated members have been nominated at the instance of local associations, so that to-day there are really six nominated against thirteen elected members. Furthermore, my friend, Mr. Hailey, here tells me that some time ago he informed the Municipal Committee that he was quite ready to see a substantial diminution of the number of nominated members.

" I do not think that it is necessary for me to labour the matter further in respect to the Notified Area Committee. The Notified Area is an exceptional and temporary arrangement. But here also the constitution of the Committee is not such as Mr. Chanda has told us. I need not weary the Council with giving them any details. But the information which lies before me shows that its constitution is considerably more liberal than he has represented.

" I am sorry to have had to trouble the Council with these matters of fact. But I feel that I cannot quite close my remarks without some allusion to what

[Mr. H. Sharp; Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda; Sir William Vincent; The Vice-President.] [10TH MARCH, 1919.]

Mr. Chanda said regarding education, although the Hon'ble Mr. Shafi has in reality sufficiently answered him. I think it can hardly be said that Delhi is so ill-equipped in the matter of educational institutions. After all it has three colleges. Mr. Chanda found fault because there was no Government college. I can assure the Council that both the Local Administration and the Government of India have kept in view the question of a Government college. Speaking for myself, I trust that Delhi will soon be so important an educational centre as to have its own University. Nor do I think that that time need be so very far distant. I submit that the educational progress of a place should be judged not by its representation on bodies but by its institutions. I understand that Delhi is as a matter of fact not unreasonably represented upon the Punjab University. But its progress must be gauged by the number of its institutions, their equipment and above all by their efficiency."

3-39 P.M.

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda:—"Sir, I am grateful to the Hon'ble the Home Member for the sympathetic reply which he has given. Of course, I may say at once that I do not seriously press for a Committee. My submission is that this is the Imperial city, but that there is no direct control by the Government of India, and that we should have things better than they are. Things should be such that the people would take pride in the affairs of the city. It is unfortunate that an impression has been created that there is a lack of public spirit. My object in bringing forward this Resolution was to get Government to consider this matter and to agree that the status of the citizens should not be inferior to that of other places; that as I said they should take a pride in being citizens of the Imperial city. I am grateful to the Hon'ble Mr. Shafi and to the Hon'ble Mr. Sharp for pointing out my mistakes. Being an outsider I cannot possibly have an intimate knowledge of the affairs of Delhi. If I have been misinformed and any mistakes have been made I accept the corrections. As regards the Ramlila procession I may say that the Hon'ble the Home Member has not met the charge that I made against the Local Administration. Though there might be friction between the two communities, I say the answer to this is conclusive that in the following year under the same conditions and under similar circumstances both the processions passed over the same route without any friction or trouble whatever, and Government was satisfied. Then twelve of the leading gentlemen of this city, five prominent Hindus and seven Muhammadans decided on a common course of action and approached the Deputy Commissioner. Why did not the Local Government accept it? That is with regard to the correction which my Hon'ble friend on my right thought fit to make. Sir, it is rather unfortunate that such a local matter as this should be introduced into the Imperial Legislative Council. What happened is this: two years ago during my absence from Silchar.....

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"May I rise to a point of order? The reasons for the Hon'ble Member's defeat in a municipal election in Assam do not seem to me to be relevant to this discussion?"

The Hon'ble the Vice-President:—"I would ask the Hon'ble Member to confine his remarks to the question before the Council."

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda:—"Well, Sir, under these circumstances I have no mind to press the Resolution, but I do hope that the appeal which I have made to the Council will be taken into consideration, and that the reforms which I have suggested will be carried out, so that the people of this city may really feel proud of being citizens of this Imperial city of Delhi. With these words I ask leave to withdraw my Resolution."

The Resolution was, by leave of the Council, withdrawn.

[10TH MARCH, 1919.] [Sir James Meston.]FINANCIAL STATEMENT, 1919-20.

The Hon'ble Sir James Meston :—" Sir, I beg to introduce the following heads of the Financial Statement for 1919-20 :— 3-43 P.M.

Revenue.	Expenditure.
Opium.	Refunds.
Interest.	Opium.
Mint.	Stamps.
Receipts in aid of superannuation.	Income Tax.
Exchange.	Interest on obligations other than the Miscellaneous.	Public Debt.
	Mint.
	Civil Furlough and Absentee Allowances.
	Superannuation Allowances and Pensions.
	Exchange.
	Miscellaneous.
	Reduction or Avoidance of Debt.

"The subjects under the direct control of the Finance Department are enumerated above and the statistical and administrative facts regarding them are set forth with sufficient fulness in the Financial Statement and in Mr. Howard's memorandum. All that I would ask your permission to do is to place on record a word or two about the war services of the Finance Department, a department which is not ordinarily associated in the popular mind with martial activities. The contributors to our war efforts which take the place of honour in this list are undoubtedly His Majesty's Mints in Bombay and Calcutta and the Mint at Hyderabad. During all the time that munitions were being made in India, those mints took a very active part in their construction. They did work which it was particularly difficult to get done elsewhere, being of a very highly technical type, particularly the manufacture of gauges for testing the output of workshops engaged in the preparation of shells. They also prepared copper bands and they were very active in the construction, especially in Bombay, of motor ambulances. They undertook all this work at a time of the greatest possible strain during their very scanty leisure with depleted staff, and it is difficult to praise too highly the unpromising zeal with which they threw themselves into this patriotic work. I did not find the staff of the Mints mentioned in the Despatches which covered so many other war workers. It seems to me that this fact is symptomatic of their work. They did their work cheerfully, zealously and unostentatiously and gave their best with no expectation of reward.

"Turning to the Indian Finance Department proper, I might mention that it possesses a cadre of 166 officers and 5,000 men. Out of these, the Department has spared, and spared very cheerfully, 51 officers and about 900 men, of whom a considerable number were on purely military duty. Three of our officers, Mr. Graham, who was well known as Accountant-General, and Mr. Sykes and Mr. Slacke, have been killed in action and a number of clerks met death whilst on active service.

"Four officers have been awarded distinctions for war services, the honours including a D.S.O. and a M.C. and three officers and four Accountants have been mentioned in Despatches.

"The majority of the officers deputed have of course undertaken financial, audit and account duties and other work of a clerical type, but nevertheless have done very valuable service of its kind. Thus at the present time officers of the department are holding the important posts of Controller of War Accounts, India, Financial Adviser to the General Officer Commanding, Mesopotamian Expeditionary Forces, and Financial Adviser to the South Persia Rifles and several of the departmental Accounts officers in Mesopotamia, for instance, the Railway and Irrigation Departments, are members of this Department.

[Sir James Meston ; Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma.] [10TH MARCH, 1919.]

"Our men have also shown a versatility which perhaps was not expected from them. We have had representatives in the Infantry, Cavalry, Gunners, Royal Engineers, the Supply and Transport, and Flying Corps and on every front. In England, we have had officers working in the Admiralty, the office of the Controller of Merchant Shipping, the Ministry of Munitions, the War Office, and the India Office. One officer has been an Assistant Provost Marshal. In Mesopotamia the Director of the Blockade, Mesopotamian Expeditionary Force, was a former member of the Indian Finance Department, while other officers have worked in Local Resources and in Food Control.

"The release of so large a number of the officers and men has thrown a very great amount of extra work on to the shoulders of those who have been left behind, and I am glad, Sir, of this opportunity of testifying to the fact that this burden has been willingly and cheerfully borne by the men who stayed in India."

RESOLUTION RE ORGANIZATION AND DEVELOPMENT OF THE BANKING SYSTEM OF THE COUNTRY.

3-48 P.M.

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma :—" Sir, I beg to move the following Resolution :—

'This Council recommends to the Governor General in Council that the expenditure under Miscellaneous 32 be increased by (a) Rs. 10,000 to meet the cost of a Committee to recommend the measures needed for organizing and developing the banking system of the country, (b) by Rs. 30,000 towards the cost of a Committee to inquire into and report on the civil expenditure of the country during the last five years and recommend measures for the retrenchment of the annual expenditure.'

"Sir, we have been sitting rather late, and I do not propose to go at any considerable length into the merits of this Resolution, which is of extreme importance, and I think that the Resolution is the least controversial of all the Resolutions that have so far been moved, and I hope therefore the Government will be able to meet me by accepting this.

"With regard to the first part of it in which I ask that a Committee should be appointed to recommend the measures needed for organizing and developing the banking system of this country, I do not think that there is much need for any arguments in support of this branch of my Resolution. The Government have very sympathetically answered my questions on this subject during the last two years and have in a way promised that as soon as the war conditions permit or as soon as the war is over, they would take it up and do what they can in respect of it. I shall now merely read the recommendations of two very responsible Commissions in support of my position, and I do not think anything more need be said. The Chamberlain Commission which reported on the 24th February, 1914, state on page 56 of their Report :—

'We are not yet in a position to report either for or against the establishment of a State or Central Bank, but we regard the subject as one which deserves early and careful consideration and suggest the appointment of a small expert Committee to examine the whole question in India either to pronounce against the proposals or to work out in full detail a concrete scheme capable of immediate adoption.'

"Nothing could be done, I believe, by the Government of India because war broke out in August, 1914, within six months of the signing of this Report, and it was felt, and perhaps rightly, that the experience gained during the war might be utilised in formulating proposals that might be suitable to the conditions of India after the war is over. I may point out, Sir, that various Committees have been sitting even during the war to see what can be done in the way of developing, organizing and improving the resources of various countries, both in the United Kingdom and elsewhere, and I therefore hope, now that the Government of India will have some respite after sending Home the Reforms Committee's Report, this question may be taken up.

[10TH MARCH, 1919.] [Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma.]

"The Chamberlain Commission have clearly suggested the appointment of a Committee, and I need not therefore lay any further emphasis on this point.

"Then I allude next to the recommendations of the Industrial Commission's Report at pages 179 and 182. They say :—

'We consider that the establishment of industrial banks working on approved lines is of sufficient national importance to justify Government assistance ; but we do not feel that we have sufficient material before us to enable us to formulate a definite scheme for industrial banks, whether of Provincial or Imperial scope. We ask, therefore, for the appointment at the earliest possible date of an expert Committee to consider what additional banking facilities are necessary for the initial and for the current finance of industries ; what form of Government assistance or control will be required to ensure their extension on sound lines as widely as possible throughout the country ; and whether they should be of Provincial or of Imperial scope, or whether both these forms might not be combined in a group of institutions working together.'

Therefore the Industrial Commission also recommend the appointment of a Committee to go into this question thoroughly at the earliest possible date. I may submit, Sir, that the experience of the Government during the last two years in connection with the war loans shows clearly what India can do under proper organisation and with Government co-operation. There is no gainsaying the fact that the people of India are at present shy in investing capital in large commercial concerns, but that they have very great faith and credit in Government institutions. I need not elaborate the point, and I therefore submit that any interest the Government may take in banking would be of considerable use in bringing forward capital to assist the industrial concerns that happen to be started. I think it must be admitted that there is enough capital of a kind, if only the people would use it, in this country to run their industries without much extraneous help. There is no use disguising the fact that the people of this country will have to change their habits considerably if they are to be industrially forward. I find from statistics that from £200 (two hundred) to £300 (three hundred) million worth of gold have been imported into this country and about Rs. 400 crores worth of silver has also been imported for various purposes, coinage, etc., and there is not in England as much gold and silver as there is here, though their fluid resources are incomparably superior. In point of land, in point of our water power, in point of human power, in point of everything that goes to constitute the credit of a country and the wealth of a country we are not backward, but we have to learn proper methods and organised banking will be one of the principal methods by which the people can be taught to utilise their resources and make them liquid. It is therefore, Sir, of the highest importance that this question should be taken up at the earliest possible date. I fear that what I have asked for is too little and not too much for the purposes we have at heart, and I have not the slightest objection if the Finance Member will see his way to give us more money than that. All I ask for is that a Committee may be appointed ; the question of money is of secondary importance.

"Coming to the second part of my Resolution, I would submit here that this is no reflection whatsoever upon the Government. This proposal should not be considered as hostile to the Government when I ask that there should be a Committee appointed to consider the question of the expenditure of India. This is a matter that every responsible Government provides for automatically. We know that in France and other countries they have Committees sitting to inquire into this question year after year, and we know that during the war various Committees were appointed in England to suggest methods and help the Government with proposals as to how Government expenditure should be curtailed. I need not take the Council into many figures to convince them that during the last few years the expenditure (I shall omit the military expenditure) has been so great that it demands some outside body to help the Government with suggestions and suggestions in favour of retrenchment. I would only ask the Council to remember this, that between 1902 and 1913, while the total expenditure of India rose from £62 millions to £82 millions, that is, by about £20 millions in a period of ten to eleven years, during the last five years our expenditure has grown from £82 to £123 millions, or an increase of £41 millions, or about 60 crores of rupees. So in five years we have increased the expenditure by Rs. 60 crores, whereas during the previous period of ten years it was increased by £20 millions. I recognise that of this increase of 60 crores about £20 millions is under the Army head. But even deducting that, we have got about £20 millions expenditure within five years under civil, as against £20 millions during previous ten to eleven years. I recognise also that during the last five years grants have been made for education, etc., and the Imperial expenditure would come to about 5½ crores. Even deducting this expenditure under heads which are approved by everybody, there is still an expenditure of £16½ millions during these five years as against 18 or 17 during the last ten years. I need not take the Council into detail after detail under direct demands of revenue, under salaries and expenses, under miscellaneous expenditure; in almost every department there has been enormous growth. Of course most of this growth may be on inquiry found to be suitable and expenditure which cannot be avoided. In a short speech it is impossible to indicate in what particular directions expenditure should be curtailed. The Hon'ble Members will see, if they go through the pages of the civil estimates the enormous sums spent on travelling expenses, and one sometimes fails to see how it is necessary for administrative purposes to transfer officers so frequently and to such distant places. We see it in the provinces as well as in the Government of India, and I think a Committee will be able to suggest various improvements in that direction. If we go into the matter in detail we shall be able to find expenditure under each head, part of which may be necessary, but part of which would be and could be cut down. But enough has been said by me without entering in the slightest degree into any hostile criticism to indicate that it should be highly beneficial to the Government as well as to the public that this question should be gone into by a Committee whose report would be of considerable assistance in reassuring the public mind that the expenditure is on healthy and sound lines. With these words, Sir, I recommend the proposition to the acceptance of the Council."

4 P.M.

The Hon'ble Sir Dinshaw Wacha:—"Sir, I should like to say a few words as far as the recommendation of a Committee for considering the question of a Central State Bank is concerned. The Chamberlain Commission did, of course, conditionally recommend such a bank, and, I believe, it will be for the Government of India in the Finance Department to see in future how a Central State Bank can be practically established. Opinions have widely differed on that subject; different Chambers of Commerce have entertained different views and the general difference is this, whether the three Presidency Banks should be amalgamated as suggested into one Central State Bank. I think the question was mooted and a good deal of discussion took place on the subject, but the result was that, as far as possible, the three Presidency Banks should be allowed to remain where they are. But how far a separate State Bank, apart from the Presidency Banks, a bank which might in its fundamental constitution approach as near as possible the Bank of England, might be established is, of course, a question for serious consideration by the Government and the Finance Department. I do not know whether this Council will act wisely in asking Government to appoint a Committee on this subject. As far as the private banking institutions are concerned, I do not see what would be the use of a Committee for this purpose. Everybody in India is fully alive to the fact that more extensive banking facilities are necessary and to the necessity of an organisation to promote the object. There is no speciality about it; it requires that the people should be taught how banking organisations could be established in each province. The only thing required is that the people themselves should have sufficient enterprise and enlightened self-interest to embark on such organisations for extensive industrial development. Self-help must be greatly stimulated. Nothing more than that is essential. However, if the Council is anxious that the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma's proposition, which is quite an academic one, may be put into effect, I have not the slightest objection. As far as civil charges are concerned, Members of Council may recollect that in this place I did bring forward this matter first to the notice of the Finance Minister who is now gone—Sir William Meyer. What I did say was this: that the net expenditure, wholly apart from the Army charges, was increasing, and that it was increasing in a larger ratio than that of net revenue. Let us put it in this way, that there is a net revenue showing in ten years a growth of only 10 per cent., while the net expenditure for the same period shows a growth of 13 per cent. Now, that is a state of finance which I do not consider to be very sound; because under those circumstances, the net expenditure would outrun the net revenue. That is my point; and I will relate to you where the fallacy lies. If the railway surplus, which now averages somewhere about 8 or 9 millions, is separated from the ordinary revenue accounts, it will be easily found that the ordinary revenue does not suffice for our expenditure. Our expenditure has increased enormously in the last ten years. If you would look into the figures of net revenue and expenditure, say, for the decade ending 1917 and if you would deduct the railway surplus from the net revenue, you will find that instead of having these large surpluses that have been shown in the past Financial Statements, there have been actual deficits. I went into the figures carefully some time ago and I am now speaking from memory; but it is a fact that in only two years during the ten years ending 1917 was there a surplus, apart from the railway surplus; that is to say, in the other years the revenue was a great deal less excluding the railway surplus to suffice to meet the increased expenditure. The other years really closed with a deficit which was concealed because of the inclusion of the railway surplus in the revenue accounts. That, I say, is not a state of things which ought to be allowed. It is financially unsound and now that the Hon'ble Sir James Meston has come and the war is over, I think it would be a very good thing if this part of the administration of civil expenditure was thoroughly overhauled. What I mean to say is this that expenditure under different heads, such as education, sanitation, police, law, etc., might be necessary; but the question is this, whether a Finance Minister should allow it or sit tight on the spending departments and say 'No, my revenues will not allow it and therefore I shall not allow larger expenditure; I will not allow my net revenue to be outrun by my net expenditure.' That is a point on which, I think, an experienced Finance Minister of the ability and acumen of the Hon'ble Sir James Meston can do more than any Committee of experts. More I need not say. There is, I admit, something in the contention of the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma that a Committee or some kind of inquiry is necessary for the purpose of investigating how far the civil charges have outgrown the revenue; but I am of conviction such a Committee cannot do any good. The question is one of practical finance. The Finance Minister ought never to allow the net expenditure to outrun the net revenue. That is my point."

The Hon'ble Mr. H. F. Howard:—"Sir, the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma's Resolution deals with two quite different matters, as he recognises, the common link being the studied moderation with which he has pitched the cost of them, as if he were to say, 'Let me have but a little'. Now, Government are very anxious to do what they can and they sympathise entirely with his object. As regards the question of banking, everybody of course—as the Hon'ble Sir Dinshaw Wacha says—realises the necessity and importance of banking development in this country. In fact the Hon'ble the Finance Member specifically referred to the importance of that question in his Statement where he said that any development in other ways, in the way of checking hoarding and in the way of a saner currency policy, must go hand in hand with the development of banking. It was a great disappointment to the Government five or six years ago when the Swadeshi banking movement, which seemed from all the outward signs to be set on a fair course, came to such horrible grief.

4-4 P.M.

[Mr. H. F. Howard.]

So far as I can recollect, the smash commenced with the People's Bank in the Punjab with no less than 70 branches or so and a crore or more of deposits; but when that went down the road it was followed by the collapse of many others, including various mushroom institutions. Apart from the smaller institutions there were the Credit Bank in Bombay and a larger bank, the Indian Specie Bank. Sir, the collapse of those banks taught us one very important lesson, and that is, for banking development you must have sane and sound and trained bankers. It is the same question as that of the trained teachers, who are so necessary for real educational development. The present position is not without its hopeful signs that we are getting to be better off than we were before in this respect. We have seen the large industrial Bank of Messrs. Tata's started in Bombay which has been mostly, if not entirely, floated on Indian capital. And we have in Bombay on smaller lines a very successful little bank, the Central Bank, which has weathered all these storms, owing largely, I believe, to the great efficiency and commonsense and knowledge of its manager, Mr. Pochkhanawala. Mr. Pochkhanawala has had great difficulties to contend with, both in the waves of panic which at different times have swept over Bombay as the result of War conditions, and I believe even as the result of spiteful personal attacks made upon him. But I understand his bank stands stronger than it did before. We have again Sir Robert Aitken in the Bank of Bombay, who has been introducing, I understand, the policy of employing Indians to an increasing extent in his Bank and its branches. Well, Sir, every little helps and we hope that all these signs show that something is being done, not by Government, but by a more or less spontaneous process, which is of far more value than anything that Government can do.

"At the same time Government recognise that there are these large problems to which the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma has drawn attention. There is the question of general banking, which is bound up with the Chamberlain Commission's recommendations, and there are those perhaps no less important side lines, the question of industrial banking, in connection with which the Hon'ble Sir Thomas Holland's Committee has recommended the appointment of a small expert Committee, and there are other branches also. I need not run through them all; but perhaps one of the most important of them is the co-operative banking movement. Many of those interested in this movement have emphasised the importance of considering how far the Government should take a hand in supporting the central finance of the movement. Sir, it is impossible to say at this stage how far these various inquiries will ramify into one another; but Government are ready to agree, as far as industrial banking goes, that a Committee should be appointed. Its composition has not yet been considered, and that will have to be carefully thought out: it was proposed that it should be an expert Committee. The Government are quite ready to make such grant as may be necessary for that purpose. The amount proposed by the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma is so small that I am not quite certain whether it is necessary to include the particular sum mentioned by him in the Budget, but if he wishes us to do so I think, Sir, we can agree.

"The second portion of the Hon'ble Member's Resolution relates to a very much wider sphere. Here again, Sir, the question is one in which Government have definitely declared what their policy is. The Hon'ble Member's suggestion in this matter is also not a new one. There have been many of these recommendations for commissions to examine expenditure and to recommend measures for retrenchment. So far as I know, the last occasion on which a definite motion to this effect was before the Council was that moved by the late Mr. Gokhale in 1911. He was given on that occasion a very sympathetic reply by Sir Guy Fleetwood Wilson and he withdrew his motion. Later on, however, Government had an officer placed on special duty and compiled a lengthy report containing a very detailed examination of the growth of public expenditure in India over a period of ten years. I know this to my cost as I was officiating in the Finance

[Mr. H. F. Howard.]

Department as Secretary, and this took me many hours a day for many weeks if not for several months. It was duly presented to Parliament and, I believe, it has thereafter reposed in the libraries; but nobody has shown any interest in it. That is apt to be the fate of all inquiries into public expenditure. Their results, however good the intentions with which they are started, are almost invariably infructuous. What usually happens on these occasions is that the factors responsible for the growth of expenditure are very well known from the outset. Take the factors on the present occasion. I will not take the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma's years, as the fact of the growth is admitted, but the two years quoted by one or two other Hon'ble Members the other day—the accounts for 1917-18 and our Budget estimate for next year. The figures mentioned by the Hon'ble Members in question were those for the growth under 'Salaries and expenses of Civil Departments', the growth being from £20·8 millions to £24·3 millions, or an increase of approximately £3½ millions in two years. Well, Sir, the main causes of that increase are two. The greater portion of the increase is due to expenditure on the beneficent services. Education accounts for £1½ millions; Medical Services £350,000; Sanitation £350,000; Agriculture £300,000, and the Scientific Services £100,000; or say £2,600,000 in round figures. The net balance of the increase (I say 'net' because there was an increase under some heads and a decrease under others) is due to the large increases in the salaries which it has unfortunately been necessary to sanction—I say unfortunately not because they are not deserved but because they were necessitated by the very high level of prices with which we are now faced. 'Police' is the largest item; under the head 'Police' there is an increase of £700,000. But an increase appears under practically all the heads. The facts are well known, and I do not think that Hon'ble Members would urge that we should not pay our servants a living wage; in fact we have heard Hon'ble Members sympathise with these services—for example Mr. Banerjea came to us the other day and said 'what about such and such a department? They are suffering great hardship.' That is just where it is. On the one side the Finance Department is asked to control this expenditure and on the other side we are accused by our own officers of not paying them a living wage. My only point in saying this is that the facts are very well known.

"Further, even assuming that at some time it may be desirable to appoint a Committee for the purpose of inquiring into the growth of expenditure, I submit that this is not the time. The five years in the immediate past which we are asked to examine are years entirely of abnormal expenditure due to the war, and an inquiry into expenditure of abnormal character can! produce no useful result. As to the future we are on the eve of the introduction of the reforms scheme and we may expect to see very shortly an entirely different line of demarcation as between Imperial and Provincial expenditure and resources. If a Committee set about these inquiries now they would have to travel all over India, and it would many years before they could hope to get to the bottom of even a small portion of the items which are covered by the Resolution. I submit it would serve no useful purpose whatever in anticipation of the separation of our finances which is contemplated to appoint any such Committee to hold an exhaustive inquiry. Again, one of the points pressed by the Hon'ble Mr. Gokhale when he moved a similar Resolution was that the Comptroller and Auditor-General should submit appropriation reports which would be published and put in the hands of Members of Council. The Comptroller-General does now submit appropriation reports; they are published and similarly the Accountants-General in the provinces submit similar appropriation reports, and I have never yet heard of any use being made by Hon'ble Members of Councils of these reports with the detailed information which they contain.

"The only other point to which the inquiry of such a Committee could be directed is the everlasting price question which underlies a great deal of the growth of expenditure. Sir, the last Committee on prices sat for over three years and produced an enormous number of volumes of very valuable statistical information supplemented by a very valuable report. But all that that report tells us is again practically what was known before, the main point being summed up in the Government Resolution on the subject. It was practically that the prices of Indian exports are governed by those prevailing in the world's markets and through the growing influence of foreign trade Indian prices, apart from temporary fluctuations resulting from the character of the seasons, tend to follow the same course as world prices. The position may have been affected to some extent by the abnormal conditions of the war as a result of which communications between countries have been restricted so that special Indian conditions may affect the position, but these disturbing factors must be transient. I feel, Sir, that if the Committee's energies were directed to that point of the inquiry, this could serve little useful purpose and they would find themselves in the position of poor Mrs. Partington who when last heard of was endeavouring to sweep back the Atlantic with a mop.

[Mr. H. F. Howard ; Sir Dinshaw Wacha ; Pandit [10TH MARCH, 1919.]

"There is only one other point which I need mention, namely, that referred to by the Hon'ble Sir Dinshaw Wacha on the question of the growth of our expenditure at a rate exceeding that of our gross revenue. I think I remember that he wrote to Sir William Meyer on the subject, and that we looked into it and we found we were largely assisted in meeting this growth of expenditure by our increasing railway surplus. But I do not know that that really affects the particular proposal which has now been made. He suggested also that there might be an overhauling of the whole position. I think that some such overhauling must necessarily take place in working out the detailed arrangements for the greater separation of the Imperial and Provincial spheres of finance."

4-18 P.M.

The Hon'ble Sir Dinshaw Wacha:—"I wish to say one word only. The railway surpluses actually conceal a large amount of expenditure growing from year to year. There will be more economy if this is made transparent. The railway surplus is the deus ex machina as opium revenue was."

4-19 P.M.

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya:—"Sir, I am glad to know from the Hon'ble Mr. Howard's statement that the Government are going to appoint a Committee to consider the question of Industrial banks. I wish, however, to point out the urgent necessity of the Committee being asked to deal with the larger question of banking in general. My friend referred to the collapse of Swadeshi banks. He will be aware, I presume, that by this time one of the banks referred to, the People's Bank, has paid ₹ 17 annas in the rupee or is going to pay it. From the history of banking in the Punjab it is clear that these banks failed not for the fault of the management entirely, but owing to other reasons. I draw attention to this because it is likely to have an important bearing upon the question. There was a Committee appointed in the Punjab to inquire into the causes of the failure of these banks, of which the Hon'ble Mr. Maynard was the President. That Committee summed up the result of their investigation in the following words: 'Thus, speaking generally, our feeling is that the collapse can be referred to two fundamental causes:—(1) the inexperience and the defects of the machinery, inevitable to the starting of every new venture; (2) the lack of palliation or remedial action such as government itself, or quasi-government agencies, i.e., a State-supported Provincial bank, might supply.' I refer to this to show the need for the Government widening the scope of the inquiry of the Committee which they propose to appoint. If the inquiry is confined to the case of Industrial banks only I fear that will not be enough.

"I would like to draw attention to one other circumstance. Mr. Howard spoke of the employment of Indians in banks started by private persons or bodies. I fear that Government does not yet realise that in this country, situated as it is, it is the duty of Government to organise banking and place it on a far better footing than heretofore. At present we are in a very unfavourable position as compared with Japan. At the time of the Restoration in 1868 ignorance concerning the methods of foreign finance, or of banking, or of joint stock companies was universal, although Japan was not entirely without some financial machinery. National finance and economy were both in a perilous condition. The Japanese Government took advice as to the system of banking. They sent men to other countries, America among them, and they introduced a well-considered scheme. They invited a gentleman from England to introduce the scheme. The first National Bank was established in Tokyo in 1873 and began business in less than ten months. There are now five kinds of banks in Japan, viewed in relation to the line of business respectively followed, namely, Home Trade, Foreign Commerce, Industry, Agriculture and Colonisation ; and in 1913 the total number of the banks was 2,152, of which 2,100 represented ordinary and savings banks at the end of the first half-year, and 52 the number of special banks at the end of the year. The paid-up capital of these banks amounted in 1913 to 436,188,271 yen, the reserve fund to 139,109,917 yen, the total deposits to 10,811,884,300 yen. I draw attention to this to show how much can be done if Government will take up the whole question in right earnest. There is a pressing need for having a net work of banks all over the country to help agriculture, trade, commerce and other purposes. The Committee which is going to be appointed should be instructed not to confine its attention to the question of industrial banks, but to the larger question of organising banks of different kinds which are needed for the development of the country. The case for a State bank has been strongly presented by the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma ; the Chamberlain Committee recommended that the question of a State bank should be investigated by a Committee. I maintain it is high time that this question was dealt with. Another matter to which I would draw attention in connection with this point is the necessity for Government taking steps to provide better training in banking and commerce for our young men. Commercial colleges are a growing necessity. The Maynard Committee pointed out that it was the want of business knowledge and experience on the part of company promoters and managers that was the primary cause of bank failures in the Punjab. It is necessary that the investing public should be protected against inexperience and from other incidental evils. There should be a regular system of commercial training where young men could qualify.

“ Lastly, I would say a word about the growth of civil expenditure. My friend the Hon'ble Mr. Howard said that this is not the right time for an inquiry. But in England during the war a National Retrenchment Committee was appointed to look into the question of expenditure. Happily the war is now at an end, and this in my opinion is the proper time for an inquiry into expenditure when experience gained in several directions is fresh. But not only this. While on the one hand my friend urged that this is not the time for examining the question of increases in expenditure, we find that the Secretary of State has granted increases of pay and pensions, and expenses are going up in other directions. If a Committee is appointed it could look into the whole question and suggest retrenchment. The country could then know whether the growing expenditure is justified, and the inquiry may lead to some economies being effected. The period is critical, expenditure has grown, and there is likely to be an increase of expenditure in several directions in the near future. This is therefore just the time when a Committee should look into the question and afford valuable help. I hope the Government will consider the matter and appoint a Committee to report to the Council. The question deserves looking into and should not be shelved any longer. I trust the proposal will be accepted.”

The Hon'ble Sir James Meston:—“ Mr. Howard has so fully and adequately dealt with the attitude of Government towards this Resolution that it is unnecessary for me to do more than to say a few words in explanation of one or two minor points. The Hon'ble Mover may naturally feel that we exhibit a certain amount of ingratitude in declining the help he has offered us in dealing with the very thorny and difficult question of banking. We are by no means ungrateful, we are very anxious to have all the light that we can get on the subject, but there is a distinct danger of over-nursing a matter, the health of which depends very largely on spontaneous growth. At the present moment I confess I can see no clear advantages in undertaking this wide inquiry which Hon'ble Members press on us. If there are any obvious advantages, I can only repeat what my Hon'ble colleague, Sir William Vincent, said a little while ago, that we have sufficient on our hands to justify us in asking to be absolved from further investigations which are not of the first interest. Banking, for all practical purposes in India, may be divided into four heads. There is first general banking, the ordinary bank with which we are familiar with which we keep our accounts or our over-drafts; there is, secondly, the land mortgage bank, thirdly, the co-operative bank, and fourthly, the Industrial bank. These are the four branches with which India is mainly concerned. As regards general banking, we have to walk warily, because we come at once against sharp differences of opinion as regards State banking and the way in which it should be approached. We are not forgetful of the problem. We are not absolutely supine on the subject. We are endeavouring to ascertain the best way in which we can approach a difficult matter. And so I must leave the question of a State Bank alone for the present, I am not sure that I am convinced by my friend the Hon'ble Pandit Malaviya that it is the duty of the Government to establish model banks in the different provinces. It is a matter which I would very much rather wish was left to the people themselves

4-29 P.M.

[Sir James Meston ; Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya.] [10TH MARCH, 1919.]

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya :—" May I, Sir, explain? I did not mean that Government should only establish model banks. I said that Government should establish and regulate banks. I meant both."

The Hon'ble Sir James Meston :—" I accept the Hon'ble Member's correction. But I am afraid my difficulty still remains as it was. I have no objection to see strong banking laws, strong regulations for preventing dishonesty and fraud. But apart from that, it does seem to me that the best way in which a nation can work out its own banking salvation is by its own experiments and its own experiences. India, as we know, is making considerable progress in indigenous banking. Mr. Howard has shown how successful the development of indigenous banking has become in Bombay. It is spreading in all parts of the country. Every six months we hear of new institutions being established, and it is no secret, that through the agency of the Presidency Banks, State or quasi-State assistance and guidance are generously provided for young banking institutions which are able to establish their claims to consideration. It would clearly be a breach of confidence for me to go further than that at the present moment, but many Hon'ble Members here will know perfectly well what I allude to.

" Now coming to the second type of Banking, the Land Mortgage Bank, everybody will recognise that it is a very different sort of institution from the ordinary commercial bank. It must be an institution which is financed very largely by long term deposits in order to ensure that it shall not be embarrassed in its handling of advances to landlords and estate holders. It is a type of bank which I do hope to see established in this country, but I hope to see it done in every province or even in smaller areas in every province, started very largely by local enterprise and maintained under local supervision and control. It is the local knowledge and neighbouring control by groups of intelligent landlords that are going to make the land mortgage business a success in this country, and I do not think it is any use for Government to undertake work of this sort on a large scale.

" We then come in the third place to co-operative banking, and in regard to that inasmuch as a very influential Committee has quite recently reported and as action is now being taken on that Report, it is unnecessary for me to say more.

“ As regards Industrial Banks, the fourth and the last head of Banking, we have declared our willingness to accept the recommendations of Sir Thomas Holland's Commission, and we are prepared to act in accordance with its recommendations. If the Hon'ble Member wishes that the expenditure under Miscellaneous 32 be increased by Rs. 10,000 for the purpose of carrying out those recommendations, I shall most gladly consent to that being done.

“ Then, Sir, I turn to the second proposal of Mr. Sarma, to increase our expenditure by Rs. 30,000 towards the cost of a Committee to recommend measures for the retrenchment of the annual expenditure of the last five years. That again at the risk of apparent ingratitude I am obliged to resist. We are always glad of any help we can get in keeping down expenditure. I do not know that we always get that particular form of help in this Council, but we are always glad of whatever help we can get. But I do say, Sir, that this particular suggestion of the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma is at present wholly premature. The last five years have been entirely an exceptional period. Everything has been abnormal, and there is no use whatsoever in setting up the huge machinery of a big Committee to correct obvious abnormalities. They are going to correct themselves. Then you have prices rising still. You have salaries slowly rising behind them, and you have got the whole of the future of our salary and wage basis extremely indeterminate and uncertain. You must give the Departments breathing time till they settle down to new conditions. It may be that we are now at the turn of the tide, that prices will shortly fall, and the necessity for a further increase in wages and salaries may cease. Anyhow none of us know what is going to happen. There is no use investigating a question of that kind until we get to a more stable position. Finally, as Mr. Howard has emphasised, there is, in connection with the Reforms which are now impending, an absolute certainty of a very considerable increase in expenditure. The new régime, whatever else it is to be (I hope it is going to be a very great success), is going to be a very expensive thing. There is no question about that. Until therefore the normal state of things is restored, until we get the new apparatus of Government into working order, I can hardly imagine the necessity for an inquiry of this kind. In fact I cannot imagine a less suitable time for such an inquiry ; and therefore on behalf of Government I must oppose the second part of the Resolution.”

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—“ We are grateful, Sir, to the Government for accepting the proposition dealing with the investigation in at least one branch of banking, namely, Industrial Banking. But I must confess that the replies to the other parts of the inquiries which I have suggested have been most disappointing and will leave a very painful impression in the country. The Government perhaps does not realise that in rejecting an inquiry into the possibilities of a State Bank which the Chamberlain Commission, a very authoritative Commission, suggested five years ago, in rejecting that proposal

4-37 P.M.

The Hon'ble Sir James Meston:—“ May I explain, Sir ? I have not objected to that, but we cannot undertake it at present.”

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—“ I am glad I am corrected, because it will still leave some faint hope—five years is not too long a period. I hope we shall live to see that when Government's hands are free from other urgent work, they will be able to appoint a Committee to investigate into the possibilities of a State Bank, and to meet the peoples' wishes. People realise that though the individualistic attitude which was in vogue both in England and in India, has very very important possibilities and should not be overlooked, it has been played out, at any rate it should not be a working proposition in India, as it is not elsewhere. I hope that the Government, having regard to the inaptitude of the people, you may say weakness of the people, you may say the ignorance of the people, ought to take up a more nationalistic, a more socialistic attitude with regard to their needs, and not refer to the individualistic policy always whenever some help is needed in this matter. And in this matter of banking, Sir, if the general banking which has ramifications into almost every other branch of banking and trade which is connected with the other branches, is neglected, and its improvement postponed, and, if you merely take up one, it will be attending to a branch instead of to the root, and I do not think that fruitful results will follow. I hope, therefore, Government will be able to find time to investigate the first branch also.

"Then coming, Sir, to the second question, namely, the appointment of a Committee to inquire and report on the retrenchment of the annual expenditure, I may be permitted to state that here again the Government reply means that we dare not risk an investigation into the annual expenditure of the country during the last five years. It comes to that virtually, or at any rate the implication is there. Well, I should have expected that when in the hurried days of the past large expenditure was incurred, that Government, of all departments, would welcome an inquiry of the kind I have suggested which would show that money has been well utilised having regard to the abnormal conditions which prevailed. They should therefore have welcomed an inquiry such as I have suggested even apart from its usefulness for the future. But has it no lessons for the future? I humbly submit that it has. The very reason that we have to differentiate between Imperial and Provincial finance seems to be the reason for inquiring into the growth of Imperial as well as Provincial expenditure so that we may know what is really Imperial expenditure and what is really Provincial expenditure, so that the Government of India may not take more from the provinces than is absolutely necessary for true Imperial needs, so that they may give the provinces all the legitimate help that is needed by them, which is only possible in the light of an inquiry such as the one I have suggested. We should have known then what revenue would have to be set apart to the Imperial Government. At any rate whether the Imperial Government from the revenues which it has would be able to help the Provincial Governments or would have to take as contributions something from the Provincial Governments. On a question of that description it is of very vital importance that we should know what the Imperial expenditure is, and therefore I should have thought the Government would have welcomed an inquiry of that sort. Apart from that, it is said that the rise of prices is so abnormal and has been so unusual that nothing which could be settled now would be of value a few years hence. I recognise the value of that reasoning to a certain extent, but because these prices have been rising there must be some constructive programme, some programme which will not result in expenditure being incurred in a haphazard manner, but according to a plan devised to meet needs as they may arise in certain eventualities. Supposing the prices increase to a certain extent, what shall be our policy; supposing they increase a little more, what will be our policy should be thought out beforehand? An inquiry like that might help the Government in formulating its policy previously and enabling it to fall back on that policy, instead of being driven into sanctioning four annas here, eight annas there, bargaining with the officials and saying 'would not this do?' and so on. I hope that this would be useful, and I therefore hope that, though the Government may decline to accept this part of the Resolution now they may be able to see their way in the near future to take action in this direction on their own initiative. I wish the two parts of my Resolution to be put separately."

The Hon'ble the Vice-President:—"If the Hon'ble Member would like to amend his Resolution, he may do so. I understand the only hope held out by the Hon'ble Member in charge was for a Committee on Industrial Banks. I shall put the Resolution in two parts as requested.

Part (a) was put to the Council and lost.

Part (b) was put to the Council and lost.

DEPARTMENT OF REVENUE AND AGRICULTURE.

Season and Crop Prospects for week ending Saturday, 15th March 1919.

Burma.—The week was rainless. Plucking of tobacco in two Lower Burma districts, harvesting of miscellaneous dry crops and cultivation of spring crops in Upper Burma are proceeding. Plucking of cotton has been completed. Standing crops are generally good. Cattle are generally healthy. The price of unhusked rice in Rangoon has risen further to Rs. 129 per hundred baskets and is much above normal. The market for white rice is firm at Rs. 325 per hundred baskets for specials.

Assam.—The weather was dry and windy. Rain is wanted for agricultural operations and growth of crops. Harvesting of mustard is nearly finished. Pressing of sugarcane, pruning of tea and ploughing for autumn rice and jute continue. Sowing of autumn rice has commenced. Outturns and prospects are generally fair but those of spring rice are indifferent. Cattle disease is reported from one district. The price of common rice is practically stationary. Fodder is insufficient in Surma Valley, Khasi and Jaintia hills. Water is insufficient in Sibsagar.

Bengal.—The weather was hot and dry. There was no rain. Agricultural operations are being retarded owing to drought. Prospects of standing crops are reported generally unfavourable. Harvesting of spring crops is in progress. The average price of common rice has risen by 1.9 per cent. Distress continues in Bankura and Brahmanbaria in Tippera. Agricultural loans and gratuitous relief are being distributed. About 3,660 persons in Bankura and 500 persons in Brahmanbaria put to relief works. Fodder is insufficient in places in Dinajpur, Bogra, Tippera and Noakhali.

Bihar and Orissa.—There was practically no rain during the week. Preparation of lands for the next season's crops, planting of sugarcane and harvesting of spring crops continue. Pressing of sugarcane is nearing completion. Standing crops are doing well. The daily average number of persons attending test works was 1,077 in Angul and 14 in Ranchi. Gratuitous relief was given to 682 persons in Cuttack and 7,437 persons in Angul. The price of common rice has risen in six districts, fallen in four and remained stationary in the remaining districts as compared with that of the preceding week. Cattle disease is reported from twelve districts.

United Provinces.—There was light and scattered rain during the week. Slight damage by hail is reported from Unao. Fields are being prepared for sugarcane and extra crops and sowings continue. Harvesting of spring crops is progressing. Irrigation of poppy, spring and extra crops continues. Pressing of sugarcane is nearing completion. Standing crops are doing well. Prospects are favourable. Very little cattle disease is reported. Condition of agricultural stock is on the whole good. Fodder continues to be scarce in some districts. Forest hay is being imported. Water is sufficient. Market supplies are adequate. Prices are stationary with a tendency to fall.

The weekly report on scarcity is as follows:—Light rain fell in Etawah, Jhansi and Hamirpur districts. No damage to crops is reported. Fields are being prepared for extra crops. Harvesting of spring crops continues. Standing crops are doing well. Condition of agricultural stock is generally satisfactory. Fodder is still generally deficient and the supply of hay from good forests is limited by shortage of railway transport. Water is sufficient. Markets are reported to be well stocked though prices continue to rule high. Price basis in Garhwal 4 seers, Jalaun and Jhansi 7 seers and elsewhere $6\frac{1}{4}$ seers per rupee. Small-pox and plague are reported from a few villages of Benares, otherwise public health is generally good. Physical condition of people on relief works is fair. No wandering or emaciation is noticeable. Distress is still reported to be acute in Jumna Chambal tract of Etawah. Some emigration is again reported from Hamirpur. There is no marked increase in crime in Banda. Gratuitous relief is being localised and reduced with the advent of spring harvest which is also rapidly reducing numbers on works. Numbers relieved on 15th:—Garhwal gratuitous 911; Etawah works 11,729, aided works 478, private 570, gratuitous 3,092, total 15,869; Benares gratuitous 1,673, Jalaun works 246, private charity 9, poorhouse 17, gratuitous 919, total 1,491; Jhansi works 68, poorhouse 11, gratuitous 499, total 578; Hamirpur works 577, poorhouse 191, gratuitous 3,697, total 4,465; Banda works 276, poorhouse 69, gratuitous 6,838, total 7,183; Agra works 669, Fatehpur works 470, Basti works 1,608.

Punjab.—Light rain fell in parts of a few districts, elsewhere the weather remained dry. Condition and prospects of wheat and other spring crops are average to good on irrigated and below average to average on unirrigated areas. Rain is still wanted for unirrigated crops. Sowings of extra spring crops and sugarcane continue and those of cotton have commenced in a few districts. Area sown is generally normal. Cattle are generally healthy but dry fodder is scarce in most districts. Green grass is available. Water for drinking and irrigation purposes is generally sufficient. Prices have fallen slightly but are generally above scarcity rates. Prices of wheat :—Rawalpindi 5½, Ferozepore and Lahore 6½, Lyallpur 6½ and Ambala 6½ seers per rupee.

North-West Frontier Province.—Slight rain fell throughout the province. More rain is still wanted in Dera Ismail Khan. Condition of standing crops both on irrigated and unirrigated lands is average in Peshawar and Bannu and below normal in Dera Ismail Khan. Extra spring crops and sugarcane are being sown in Peshawar district. Prices of wheat :—Peshawar 7½ and Dera Ismail Khan 6½ seers per rupee.

Jammu.—No rain fell during the week. Prices are stationary.

GOVERNMENT OF INDIA.

HOME DEPARTMENT.

POLICE.*Delhi, the 21st March 1919.RESOLUTION RE THE ADMINISTRATION OF THE INDIAN ARMS ACT.*RESOLUTION.

For many years past the administration of the Indian Arms Act has been the subject of adverse criticism, mainly because European and East Indian subjects of His Majesty are exempted from the obligation to take out licenses for the possession of firearms, while Indians, outside certain privileged classes, have to apply for licenses and even if successful in their applications, can in most cases obtain them only after enquiries as to their status and character. The Government of India have for some time past been anxious to remove this racial discrimination and to minimise the delays and inconvenience which necessarily attend the present system of administering the law, and they have had prolonged correspondence with local Governments on the details of this intricate and difficult subject.

2. Some critics of the existing system demand the repeal of the Act, or in the alternative its administration on a purely fiscal basis, whereby any one desiring a license could secure it without question, on payment of the prescribed fee. The Government of India doubt whether the serious objections to so simple a solution of the problem have been fully realised by those who advocate it. In their responsibility for the maintenance of order and tranquillity the Government of India are bound to take into account the effect which an unrestricted dissemination of firearms throughout the country-side might have upon serious crime. They cannot overlook the likelihood of such weapons being freely used in the dacoities, faction fights, and agrarian and religious riots which figure so frequently in the records of our criminal courts. In more than one province firearms illicitly obtained have during recent years played an appreciable part in serious crime, and the Government of India cannot contemplate with equanimity the similar use of such weapons in other provinces. They apprehend that if there were no restrictions on the possession of firearms by lawless characters, such an increase in crimes of violence might ensue as would endanger the security of the country, and that it would be necessary largely to increase the number of armed police and to improve their equipment.

3. The Government of India have decided, therefore, that the question cannot be dealt with on these lines. They have considered the possibility of abolishing all exemptions and requiring every one from the highest authorities downwards to take out a license for the possession of firearms. Enquiries showed the objections to this course. There is every reason to believe that a general cancellation of exemptions would be regarded as withdrawing a valued privilege if not as a mark of mistrust.

4. After repeated examination of the question the Government of India decided that the best chance of solving the problem lay first in rigidly restricting the number of exempted persons and secondly in arranging that persons of recognised status and character should, without distinction of race, ordinarily be entitled to obtain licenses for the possession of firearms without enquiry or delay. While details were still under discussion the following resolution was moved in the Imperial Legislative Council and accepted by Government on the 19th September 1918 :—

“ This Council recommends to the Governor-General in Council that a Committee of official and non-official members of this Council be appointed to consider and report to the Governor-General in Council to what extent the Indian Arms Act and the rules thereunder can be amended ”.

The whole question was then laid before a Committee composed partly of official and partly of non-official members of the Council, and the Government of India are now in a position to formulate the conclusions reached after examination of the report of this Committee. These are as follows :—

- (1) All arms other than firearms and also firearms of an obsolete character possessing a purely antiquarian value will be exempted from all the prohibitions and directions contained in the Arms Act, except in Burma, the Punjab and the North-West Frontier Province, provided that any local Government may retain the existing restrictions for particular weapons or in particular areas where such a course is necessary in the interests of law and order.
- (2) All distinctions of a racial character will be abolished, but a restricted schedule of exempted persons as appended hereto will still be retained, the privilege being subject to the same restrictions in respect of the number and description of weapons as at present.
- (3) Exempted persons will not be required to register their weapons but power will be reserved to the Government of India and the local Governments and Administrations to require the registration of rifles, revolvers and pistols in the possession of such persons where necessary.
- (4) The great land-holders included in entry (6) of the schedule appended, who at present enjoy exemption in respect of weapons in the possession of their retainers, will in future be allowed exemption in respect of a fixed number of retainers whose weapons will be registered annually as retainers' weapons, their number and description only being specified.
- (5) To persons of approved character and status licenses for the possession of rifles (other than those of prohibited bores) and smooth bores will ordinarily be issued on application and without previous enquiry. It will be for local Governments to prescribe for each province the qualifications entitling any person to this privilege, but subject to any such orders the Government of India consider that the following qualifications should be sufficient :—
 - (i) Membership of any order established by the Crown, or the possession of a title conferred or recognised by the Government of India or of the Kaiser-i-Hind Medal or a certificate of honour.
 - (ii) Membership, past or present, of the Indian or a Provincial Legislative Council or inclusion in the list of Provincial Darbaris.
 - (iii) Payment of not less than R1,000 per annum land revenue or R250 in road and public works cesses.
 - (iv) Payment of income-tax on an income of not less than R3,000 for a period of three years.
 - (v) Being a Government officer in receipt of not less than R250 per month.
 - (vi) Being a commissioned or gazetted officer of His Majesty's Military or Naval Forces or His Majesty's Indian Marine Service or a commissioned Indian officer of the Imperial Service Troops in active service.
 - (vii) Being a pensioned officer who before retirement was by virtue of his official position included in any of the classes described in (v) or (vi) above.
- (6) Persons who have hitherto enjoyed exemption but are not included in the new schedule of persons exempted will be required to take out licenses, but it will be open to the local Government to treat them as entitled to the privilege described in clause (5) above, provided that there is no race discrimination.

(7) The following changes will be made in the rules regulating the issue of licenses :—

- (i) Licenses for revolvers and pistols will be issued only in cases of real necessity and to persons of approved character, the fee being fixed at an enhanced rate of Rs. 10 except in the North-West Frontier Province where no change will be made.
- (ii) For a license in Form XVI the fee will be raised to Rs. 5 for each breech-loading weapon but will remain unchanged for muzzle-loaders.
- (iii) Licenses will be granted, if so desired, for an extended period of three years on a compounded fee subject to the existing conditions regarding the report of loss and transfer of the weapon, and subject further to the proviso that the local authorities shall have the right to enquire whether the weapon for which a license has been granted is still in the possession of the license-holder.
- (iv) Special instructions will be issued to afford facilities to agriculturists to obtain licenses for the protection of crops or cattle and to secure that they are not withheld without good cause.
- (v) Licenses, other than those for the protection of crops or cattle, when issued at the license holder's place of permanent residence will be valid throughout British India, except Burma, Assam and the North-West Frontier Province, subject to any restrictions that may be necessary in regard to any particular province.
- (vi) Licenses will not only be issued by District Magistrates but also by such Sub-Divisional Officers as the local Government may specially empower in this behalf. For the purposes of enquiry preliminary to the issue of a license, other agencies will, where possible, be employed in addition to or in substitution for the police.

The necessary modification of the rules and schedules in order to give effect to these decisions is now being undertaken, but in order to give persons, who are exempted at present but will not be exempted in future, time to adjust themselves to the new conditions, the changes in the list of exempted persons and the enhancement of fees will not take effect until 1st January 1920.

ORDER.—Ordered that a copy be forwarded to all the local Governments and Administrations and to all Departments of the Government of India.

ORDERED further that the Resolution be published in the Supplement to the Gazette of India.

Secretary to the Government of India,

CLASS 6.—AMMUNITION.

The term "ammunition" means any explosive of any of the foregoing classes when the same is enclosed in any case or contrivance, or is otherwise adapted or prepared so as to form a cartridge or charge, for small-arms, cannon or any other weapon, or for blasting, or to form any safety or other fuze for blasting or for shells, or to form any tube for firing explosives or to form a percussion cap, detonator, fog-signal, shell, torpedo, war-rocket, or any other contrivance other than a firework.

The term "percussion cap" does not include a detonator.*

The term "detonator" means a capsule or case which is of such strength and construction and contains fulminate in such quantity, that the explosion of one capsule or case would communicate the explosion to other like capsules or cases.

The term "safety fuze" means a fuze for blasting which burns and does not explode, and which does not contain its own means of ignition, and which is of such strength and construction and contains an explosive in such quantity that the burning of such fuze will not communicate laterally with other like fuzes.

The ammunition class has three divisions.

DIVISION 1.

Nobel's Safety Electric Time Fuze.
Percussion Caps.

* In consequence of the results of experiments carried out, it has been decided that a percussion cap can only be properly classed as such if it contains less than 1/16 grain of a composition of the 1st Division of the fifth (Fulminate) Class of which not more than 25 per cent. consists of fulminate of mercury, or less than 0.5 grains of any other explosive of the 1st Division of the 5th (Fulminate) Class; and it has been further decided that percussion caps shall not be classed as such when they contain anvils or have their composition unprotected by tin foil or other suitable substance, as under those circumstances they are liable to explode en masse.

Filled Shells not containing their own means of ignition and closed by a substantial metal plug.

Fuze lighters.
Fuzes for Shells.
Instantaneous Fuze.
Port Fires.
Tubes for firing Explosives.

DIVISION 1.—FIREWORK COMPOSITION.

The term "firework composition" means any chemical compound or mechanically mixed preparation of an explosive or inflammable nature, which is used for the purpose of making manufactured fireworks, and is not included in the former classes of explosives, and also any star and any coloured fire composition, subject to the proviso to the definition of manufactured fireworks.

Nil.

DIVISION 2.—MANUFACTURED FIREWORKS.

MANUFACTURED FIREWORKS, consisting of any explosive of the classes 1, 2, 3, 4 and 6 and any firework composition, when such explosive or composition is enclosed in any case or contrivance or is otherwise manufactured so as to form a squib, cracker, toy cap or amorce, serpent, rocket (other than a war-rocket), maroon, lance, wheel, Chinese fire, Roman candle, or other article specially adapted for the production of pyrotechnic effects, or pyrotechnic signals, or sound signals:

Provided that a substantially constructed and hermetically closed metal case, containing not more than one pound of coloured fire composition of such a nature as not to be liable to spontaneous ignition shall be deemed to be a "manufactured firework" and not a "firework composition."

DEPARTMENT OF STATISTICS, INDIA

March 21, 1919

G. FINDLAY SHIRRAS,

Director of Statistics

Published by order of the Governor-General in Council

DEPARTMENT OF STATISTICS, INDIA.

TRADE FLUCTUATIONS IN SELECTED ARTICLES IN JANUARY, 1919.

The object of the tables appended is to show the quantities of the principal staples of agricultural produce imported from the various provinces and Indian states and from foreign countries into the ports of Calcutta, Bombay, and Karachi, and into the Madras ports during the month of January, 1919, and for the ten months, April to January 1919, as compared with the corresponding periods of 1918. The statistics include sea-borne foreign and coasting trade as well as inland (rail and river-borne) trade. They have been furnished by Collectors of Customs, Steamer Companies, Railway Audit Officers, and the Commissioners for the Port of Calcutta.

TRADE FLUCTUATIONS IN JANUARY, 1918 AND 1919.

It will be seen from Table I that the imports by rail, river, and sea in January, 1919, as against the corresponding month of 1918, show (in round numbers) a decrease of—

- 72 per cent in tea
(12,022,000 lbs as against 43,383,500 lbs last year),
- 63 per cent in gram and pulse
(34,100 tons as against 91,000 tons last year),
- 48 per cent in jute
(268,600 bales as against 519,700 bales last year),
- 31 per cent in wheat (excluding wheat flour)
(35,800 tons as against 51,900 tons last year),
- 22 per cent in rice (including paddy)
(98,400 tons as against 126,800 tons last year) and
- 5 per cent in linseed
(17,300 tons as against 18,200 tons last year).

The increase of 38 per cent (12,000 tons as against 8,700 tons last year) in the imports by rail, river, and sea into the ports of rape and mustard seed was due to larger exports from the Punjab and Bombay. There was an increase of 10 per cent (425,600 bales as against 385,800 bales last year) in the imports of raw cotton on account of larger exports mainly from Bombay, the Central Provinces and Berar, the Punjab, and Nizam's territory.

It will be seen from Table IV (wheat, excluding wheat flour) that the principal sources of the imports in January, 1918, were the United Provinces, the Punjab, and the Central Provinces and Berar. During January, 1919, the Provinces from which the ports received their supplies were mainly the Punjab (58 per cent) and the United Provinces (26 per cent of the total). Table XI shows the exports from India by sea of wheat (including wheat flour) month by month during the last six years.

NOTE.— One bale of cotton or jute is equivalent to 400 lbs.
One maund is equivalent to 82½ lbs.
One maund of paddy is taken as equivalent to 25 seers of rice.

GENERAL RESULTS—TEN MONTHS' IMPORTS INTO THE PORTS FROM UP-COUNTRY, ETC., THIS YEAR AND LAST YEAR.

The ten months' figures in table I show (in round numbers) a decrease of—

- 51 per cent in wheat (excluding wheat flour)
(842,400 tons as against 1,726,400 tons last year),
- 19 per cent in tea
(225,579,700 lbs as against 278,431,300 lbs last year),
- 13 per cent in raw cotton
(2,309,700 bales as against 2,665,800 bales last year),
- 6 per cent in gram and pulse
(680,700 tons as against 724,500 tons last year), and
- 1 per cent in rice (including paddy)
(875,300 tons as against 882,000 tons last year).

Imports of linseed by rail, river, and sea into ports show an increase of 119 per cent (309,300 tons as against 141,300 tons last year), mainly on account of larger exports from Bihar and Orissa, the United Provinces, Central Provinces and Berar, Nizam's Territory, and Rajputana and Central India. The imports of jute into Calcutta show an increase of 13 per cent (4,218,700 bales as against 3,737,400 bales last year), owing mainly to larger exports from Bengal and Bihar and Orissa. The increase of 5 per cent (113,200 tons as against 107,400 tons last year) in rape and mustard seed is mainly accounted for by larger exports from the Punjab and Bombay.

TRADE FLUCTUATIONS IN JANUARY, 1919, AS COMPARED WITH THE PREVIOUS MONTH.

As compared with December, 1918, the imports in January, 1919, into the ports referred to above show (in round numbers) a decrease of—

- 57 per cent in linseed
(17,300 tons as against 40,000 tons previous month),
- 45 per cent in jute
(268,600 bales as against 484,300 bales previous month),
- 30 per cent in tea
(12,022,000 lbs as against 17,056,200 lbs previous month), and
- 4 per cent in rape and mustard seed (12,000 tons as against 12,500 tons previous month),

and an increase of—

- 34 per cent in raw cotton
(425,600 bales as against 317,300 bales previous month),
- 13 per cent in rice (including paddy)
(98,400 tons as against 86,800 tons previous month),
- 13 per cent in gram and pulse (34,100 tons as against 30,300 tons previous month), and
- 1 per cent in wheat (excluding wheat flour)
(35,800 tons as against 35,500 tons previous month).

The Statistics for January, 1918 and 1919, as also for the ten months ending January, 1918 and 1919, together with those for December, 1918 and January, 1919, are summarised below :—

NOTE.—One bale of jute is equivalent to 400 lbs.

By "Calcutta" is meant the town of Calcutta with Howrah and the Kidderpore Docks. The imports exclude, therefore, imports into those jute mills which are outside this area. Such mills form the large majority of the total number of mills manufacturing jute.

The following statement shows in respect of each of the descriptions of sugar distinguished in the Tariff Schedule II (except molasses and all other kinds of sugar), first, the total imports into India in the month of February 1919, and the average value per cwt. as calculated on the returns received from the Customs Houses; and, secondly, a running total showing the total imports into India since the beginning of the year (1st October to 30th September) and the average net value per cwt. so far established. It is published in conformity with the procedure laid down in Customs Circular No. V of 1911, in order to enable merchants to compute the probable rate of duty for the year 1920 :—

COTTON PRESS RETURN.No. 10 of 1918-19.*PREFATORY NOTE.*THE COTTON SEASON, 1918-19.

In the Final Cotton Forecast, published on the 19th February, 1919, the yield of the crop was estimated at 3,671,000 bales on an area of 20,497,000 acres, as compared with 4,000,000* bales on an area of 25,188,000 acres, the final estimates of last year, a decrease of 8 per cent in the outturn. There were 857,000 bales of cotton pressed in the pressing factories, and 206,000 bales of unpressed cotton received in the spinning mills, from 1st September to 31st January, 1919, as against 715,000 bales and 220,000 bales, respectively, during the corresponding period of last year, showing an increase of 20 per cent in the case of presses, but a decrease of 6 per cent in the case of mills. The increase in the quantity of cotton pressed this season is due to larger receipts in the presses of the Central Provinces and Berar, where the yield of this year's crop is reported to be 33 per cent better than last year. Too much stress should not be laid on the accuracy of these returns as a means of checking the forecast estimates of outturn, as there is at present no system in vogue of furnishing complete returns from all the presses and mills in India. The figures for the States of Hyderabad, Central India, Rajputana, and Mysore are, as will be seen from the footnotes to the tables, mostly incomplete and have been excluded for the purpose of comparison.

* The trade estimate is, however, 4,204,000 bales. (Net exports 1,410,000 bales, mill consumption 2,044,000 bales, and extra-factory consumption 750,000 bales.) The estimate of mill consumption is based on returns furnished by mills to the Millowners' Association, Bombay. The previous method of calculating mill consumption from the yarn produced by mills, and furnished under the Cotton Excise Duties Act, has been discarded in favour of the Millowners' returns.

DEPARTMENT OF STATISTICS, INDIA }

G. FINDLAY SHIRRAS,

Director of Statistics.

DEPARTMENT OF STATISTICS, INDIA.

Second WHEAT Forecast, 1918-19.

THIS forecast is based on reports received from provinces and States and refers to 98·6 per cent of the total wheat acreage of India. The statistics, therefore, cover all the important wheat-growing areas. The condition of the crop referred to below generally relates to that prevailing in the latter half of February.

The total area sown amounts to 23,733,000 acres, as against 34,469,000 acres at the corresponding date of last year, or a decrease of 31 per cent. As compared with the final area of last year (35,497,000 acres),* the present estimate shows a decrease of 33 per cent.

General condition.—The present condition of the crop is generally fair to good, except in the unirrigated tracts † and in Bombay and Sind, where it is below average. The rainfall in January and February was, as will be seen from the table on page 512, above the normal, and this generally improved the prospects of the crop.

The detailed figures for the provinces and States are as follows :—

Total	23,733,000	34,469,000	—10,736,000

The provincial reports are summarised below :—

Punjab (32·7 per cent of the total area under wheat in India).—The area sown in the British districts is now estimated at 7,114,000 acres, which is 31 per cent below the estimate made at this time last year. The area in the Indian States is now returned at 705,000 acres, which is 45 per cent short of the corresponding estimate of last year. The combined area for the whole province (7,819,000 acres) shows a decrease of 32 per cent as compared with last year's corresponding estimate. The decrease, as explained in the first forecast, was due to unfavourable climatic conditions and to shortage of canal water at sowing time. Very little rain fell in the first three weeks of January, and this caused some anxiety about the condition of unirrigated crops. But moderate to heavy rain received towards the end of January, except in parts of the south-east and west, where the fall was light, greatly improved the standing crop. During the third week of February, moderate rain from over an inch in Lahore and Amritsar to 1½ inches in Sialkot proved beneficial. The condition and prospects of irrigated wheat are average to good and of unirrigated wheat average or below it. In the Indian States the condition of standing crops is average to good.

United Provinces (22 per cent of the total area under wheat in India).—In the January forecast the area sown was estimated at 5,800,000 acres, as against 7,050,000 acres at the corresponding date of last year. No change has since then been made in this estimate. Excellent rain fell towards the end of January. It was general and well distributed, and was of great benefit to the crop. There were useful showers in parts of the provinces during the month of February. The irrigated crop is everywhere promising, and the yield of this crop is estimated to be normal. The unirrigated crop has improved in condition, but owing to drought in the earlier part of the season the outturn will be below normal. Part of the crop was sown late owing to the influenza epidemic, and future prospects depend largely on the absence of early hot winds.

Central Provinces and Berar (11·6 per cent of the total area under wheat in India).—The area sown in the British districts is now estimated at 2,951,000 acres (202,000 acres being in Berar), which is 22 per cent below the estimate made at this time last year. The area sown in the Khairagarh and Nandgaon States is estimated at 92,000 acres, as against 132,000 acres reported at this time last year. The combined area for the whole province (3,043,000 acres) shows a decrease of 22 per cent as compared with last year's corresponding area. Moderate to heavy rain fell all over the provinces in January and up to the middle of February. It was, however, accompanied by hail in several districts causing some damage in places, but the rainfall greatly benefited the late sown crop. An opportune break seems to have now set in, and the present condition and prospects of the crop vary from fair to good. Only Damoh is expected to yield a full crop of 120 per cent of the normal. The outturn in Saugor, Jabulpore, Mandla, Seoni, Narsinghpur, and Nagpur is estimated at 98 to 103 per cent, and in the remaining

* Revised.

(a) Including Indian States.

† The unirrigated area under wheat is, on the average of the five years ending 1916-17, about 48 per cent of the total wheat area in the Punjab, 45 per cent in the United Provinces, and 71 per cent in the North-West Frontier Province.

districts from 48 to 90 per cent. The average outturn for the Central Provinces and Berar, as a whole, is estimated at 92 per cent of the normal, as against 85 per cent last year. On this basis the total yield of the British districts is estimated at 727,000 tons, as against 749,000 tons, the revised estimate made after the submission of the second forecast last year. An average outturn of 85 per cent of the normal is expected in the Khairagarh State, while in Nandgaon it is estimated at only 45 per cent owing to the damage done by hail.

Bombay and Sind (8·7 per cent of the total area under wheat in India).—The total area is estimated at 1,178,000 acres (287,000 acres being in the Indian States), which is 59 per cent below the estimate made at this time last year. The decrease is due to the unfavourable season, and also to more attention having been paid to the raising of fodder crops, which were urgently required for cattle. Some rain fell in January, particularly in Gujarat and north Deccan, but it was too insignificant to be useful and the unirrigated crop continued to wither except in the south, and in places completely dried up. The irrigated crop also suffered in places from deficiency of water supply. In Gujarat the irrigated crop is estimated to yield between 65 to 85 per cent of the normal, and the unirrigated crop, where not entirely withered, from 10 to 25 per cent. In the Deccan the irrigated crop is expected to yield about 50 to 85 per cent and the unirrigated crop from 50 to 65 per cent in East Khandesh, and elsewhere the surviving crop is estimated at about 30 to 50 per cent of the normal. In the Karnatak where the crop is grown mostly unirrigated, it is estimated to yield between 10 to 35 per cent in Bijapur and the east of Dharwar, and elsewhere between 50 to 85 per cent. The Sind crop was benefited by rain in January and February and is reported to be fairly good. It is estimated at about 50 per cent in Larkana and Hyderabad, and about 66 per cent elsewhere. The season has been late, and harvesting has only just commenced in some places in the Deccan and the Karnatak. The general harvesting of the unirrigated crop has begun, while that of the irrigated crop will take place in April. The Sind crop is not yet ready for harvest.

Bihar and Orissa (4·1 per cent of the total area under wheat in India).—The area sown up to the end of February is estimated at 956,000 acres, as against 224,000 acres at this time last year, or a decrease of 19 per cent due to the failure of late rains. The standing crop was also affected by the drought in the beginning of the season. The rainfall in January was general, and above the normal all over the province, and of great benefit to the standing crop, and prospects have improved considerably. From the District Officers' reports the provincial outturn works out to 72 per cent of the normal. But the provincial Director is of opinion that the improvement due to the rain in January has been considerably underestimated in some districts, and that the average yield will approximate to 90 per cent of the normal.

North-West Frontier Province (3·2 per cent of the total area under wheat in India).—The total area sown up to the end of January is estimated at 839,000 acres, as compared with 1,214,000 acres in the corresponding forecast of last year, or a decrease of 31 per cent. The decrease occurs both on irrigated and unirrigated lands (chiefly on the latter), and is shared by all the districts and agencies alike. The condition of the standing crop throughout the province is reported to be only average, except in Dera Ismail Khan where it is below average. The crop, which was suffering from prolonged drought in several districts, has been greatly benefited by the rains which fell at the end of January and also in the month of February.

Bengal (0·4 per cent of the total area under wheat in India).—The total area sown is estimated at 111,000 acres, which is 10 per cent below the corresponding estimate of last year. The weather conditions have been unfavourable owing to the prolonged drought which prevailed from the end of September till the middle of January. The rainfall in January has, however, improved the situation to some extent, although it has come too late to ensure a normal crop.

Delhi (0·1 per cent of the total area under wheat in India).—The total area sown is estimated at 6,000 acres as against 55,000 acres reported at this time last year. The condition of the irrigated crop is reported to be good, while that of the unirrigated crop poor.

Ajmer-Merwara (0·05 per cent of the total area under wheat in India).—The total area is estimated at 5,000 acres as against 17,000 acres, the corresponding estimate of last year. The condition of the crop is reported to be good. The January rainfall did good to the crop, of which the average yield is estimated at 75 per cent of the normal.

Central India (9·9 per cent of the total area under wheat in India).—The total area is estimated at 2,711,000 acres, which is 30 per cent below the corresponding estimate of last year. The condition of the crop is reported to be fair in Indore and the Southern States, and generally satisfactory in Bundelkhand. The winter rains have improved the condition of the crop in Bhopal, where the average outturn is estimated at 75 per cent of the normal. The detailed figures are as follows :—

	1918-19 Acres	1917-18 Acres
Gwalior	1,152,123	1,606,755

Hyderabad (3·1 per cent of the total area under wheat in India).—The total area sown is now estimated at 647,000 acres, which is 44 per cent below the corresponding estimate of last year. The decrease is mainly due to the outbreak of influenza and also to deficiency of rainfall at sowing time. The condition of the crop is generally fair. The average outturn is estimated at about 47 per cent of the normal.

Rajputana (2·8 per cent of the total area under wheat in India).—The total area is estimated at 586,000 acres, which is 58 per cent below the estimate made at this time last year. Detailed figures for the States are as follows :—

Freights.—The figures below show the statistics of wheat freights since the outbreak of war from the undermentioned producing countries to the United Kingdom. As compared with this time last year, the rates, owing to the cessation of hostilities, show a marked fall in almost all the countries. It may be noted that Indian freight rates are now about ten times greater than at the outbreak of war.

Wheat in Foreign Countries.—From the latest information published by the International Institute of Agriculture, Rome, it appears that the area sown with the 1918-19 crop in the Argentine is estimated at 16,961,000 acres, which is 5 per cent below the final figure of 1917-18. In Australia the estimates for 1918-19 are 8,645,000 acres and 2,161,000 tons, which are 11 per cent, and 30 per cent, respectively, below the final estimates for 1917-18. The estimates of the 1918 crop in the principal countries in the Northern Hemisphere, as compared with the final figures for 1917, are shown below :—

	Area (acres)		Yield (tons)
	1918	1917	1918	1917

United Kingdom	2,773,000	2,103,000	2,407,000	1,719,000

From unofficial sources it appears that the spring wheat acreage in the United States of America will beat all previous records. The winter wheat crop is reported to be without snow cover. In Canada the weather is reported to be favourable for the ploughing of land for spring sowing. The exportable surplus of the present crop of Australia with previous year's stock is estimated at 25 million quarters or about 5½ million tons. The condition of the present winter crops in France is reported to be favourable.

GOVERNMENT OF INDIA.

DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION.

GENERAL.

Delhi, the 21st March 1919.

RESOLUTION.

THE Government of India have been considering for some time past the question of making the official records in India more accessible than at present to students of history and of removing, so far as possible, any existing obstacles to research. In framing suggestions to this end, they have been assisted by the recommendations of the Royal Commission on the Public Records of England and Wales. Certain questions arising from the application of those recommendations to Indian records were laid before local Governments. After considering their replies and consulting expert advice, the Government of India have decided to introduce the following changes in their own Record Office and they recommend a like procedure in the offices of the local Governments.

Records to be made more accessible.

2. The records of India are kept partly in the Record Office of the Government of India, and partly in the provincial Records Offices. The system hitherto followed in their treatment is evolved from the practice followed in the English Record Office and consists in the preparation of :—

Present position

- (i) a press list giving a complete list of documents, with some indication of their dates and contents ;
- (ii) a calendar giving a precis of nearly every document of importance or a reference to some publication where it may be found.

Were full effect given to this system, it would greatly facilitate the work of students and serve to remove some of the difficulties which now militate against research. But the progress made has not been satisfactory and the system has been characterised as defective by the Commission in England. Press lists are regarded as too meagre. Calendaring is admitted to be a process too slow, too elaborate and too costly for application to modern State papers. Such criticisms of the method pursued in England have still greater weight in India, where widely scattered collections and paucity of workers present additional difficulties.

3. In supersession of this system, the Government of India have now decided that the best method of rendering the records accessible to the public will be as follows :—

- (i) The preparation of a list of the volumes or bundles contained in the record offices, accompanied by a descriptive handbook to their general contents.
- (ii) The calendaring of certain documents only.
- (iii) The reprinting in full of certain specified classes of documents.

By dealing with the records on these principles, it will be possible to discontinue the preparation of press lists except so far as may be necessary to finish a volume which is in hand or to complete a definite series which is capable of completion within three or four years. In the same way, when the preparation of calendars now actually in hand has been completed, no fresh calendars should be prepared except in accordance with the system now suggested.

Some amplification of the three new methods now proposed is found in the paragraphs below.

4. It is an essential preliminary that in each record office there should be a printed list or catalogue of the volumes and bundles which it contains.

Catalogues and handbooks.

Such lists require to be supplemented by a brief catalogue raisonné or handbook on lines similar either to the Madras handbook published by the Curator of the Madras Records or to the more detailed catalogue of Orme manuscripts prepared by Mr. S. C. Hill.

A student of history will ordinarily with the help of the printed catalogues and handbooks be placed in a position to know whether a particular office is likely to contain papers of the kind required by him. The offices already contain in a greater or less degree a series of manuscript indices to the proceedings, which have been compiled contemporaneously with the proceedings themselves, and these indices though often defective are utilised for tracing documents for administrative purposes. If a moderate degree of attention is devoted to the maintenance and where necessary to the completion of these indices, it is believed that when a student has ascertained the existence in the office of any class of documents of which he is in search, he will be able with the help of these indices to be placed by the record staff in possession of such documents as he may desire. By these means the Government of India hope to attain the object for which press lists have hitherto been compiled without incurring the loss of time and money which the continued preparation of such press lists would entail.

5. For the benefit of the general public and of students who are unable to visit the record offices or to read the documents in vernacular, the preparation of calendars may be desirable. But the matter to be dealt with in these calendars would be so limited as to enable the calendaring to be completed within a reasonable limit of years and would be defined under a pre-arranged system so as not to be subject to alteration by individuals. The precise fields to be selected for this purpose would be determined by the Indian Historical Records Commission, described in paragraph 8 below; but, as at present advised, the Government of India would confine the preparation of calendars to the despatches passing between the Indian and the Home Government, certain series of vernacular records and a few selected series of English records.

6. The Government of India in the third place hope that the reprinting in full of certain records or selections of records will be undertaken (a) by the Reprints.

Government itself, (b) by private societies and individuals with financial assistance from Government, and (c) by such societies or individuals without such help.

- (a) As regards work to be done by Government it is worth mentioning that a certain amount has already been accomplished, though on no uniform plan. In Bombay, Madras and the Central Provinces, for instance, a large number of fascioli have been issued containing interesting reprints of individual reports or special series of correspondence and a valuable collection of papers has been reprinted by the Punjab Government in ten volumes. Any series at present under reprint might suitably be concluded, but for the future the Government of India desire that except in the case of records showing signs of decay or likely to perish, such reprinting should be confined to records of a date previous to 1702.

- (b) The Government of India are of opinion that an arrangement under which Government should subsidize reprinting by private societies or individuals may suitably be introduced to meet the case of special classes of records, the determination of the records to be so treated resting with the Government or with the Commission.

proposed in paragraph 8 below. The publications thus subsidized should, however, be confined to copies of unedited records or translations of vernacular records which have not before been published in English.

- (c) The Government of India consider that publication of reprints, without financial help from Government, if carried out by competent persons, should be encouraged in every possible way, and all necessary facilities should be given by Government officers to the students who undertake it.

7. In addition to the steps explained above, which the Government of India think can be taken to bring the contents of the records to the notice of those who wish to use them for research, arrangements may suitably be made by the various record offices to grant proper facilities to those who desire personally to consult the documents. For this purpose a series of rules is desirable for each record office, to govern the use of records by students. Such rules have already been introduced in the Bengal Record Room and where similar rules are framed for other record offices efforts are required to keep them before the public whom they affect by communicating them to the Professors of History in Colleges and Universities and in other ways. The Government of India recognise that considerable advantage would attend the grant of free access, with suitable precautions, to the earlier records and they would be prepared to have the matter considered under the advice of the Indian Historical Records Commission. The Government of India would at the same time like arrangements to be made for a fuller interchange than at present of the publications of the various record offices and a more extensive sale of these to the public.

8. The Government of India feel that in these questions they should have at their disposal a permanent body of expert advisers whose opinion would carry weight with the Record officers and the public. With such a body at hand for advice, they are convinced that the methods adopted would meet the real wants of genuine historical students. They have accordingly decided to constitute an "Indian Historical Records Commission" consisting of:—

- (1) The Secretary to the Government of India, Department of Education, ex-officio President.
- (2) The Keeper of the Records of the Government of India, ex-officio Secretary.
- (3) The Curator, Madras Record Office, ex-officio member.
- (4) The Keeper of Records, Bengal, ex-officio member.
- (5) Professor Jadunath Sarkar, M.A., member.
- (6) The Ven'ble Archdeacon W. K. Firminger, M.A., B.D., B.Litt., member.
- (7) Professor L. F. Rushbrook Williams, M.A., member.
- (8) Mr. B. K. Thakore, B.A., member.

The ex-officio members will be permanent, but the rest of the members will hold office for a period of three or five years. The headquarters of the Commission will be at Delhi and it would ordinarily meet twice a year—the routine work between meetings being carried on by the Keeper of the Records of the Government of India, Calcutta, as permanent Secretary to the Commission. The duties of the Commission would be of a purely consultative character; it would make enquiries and recommendations regarding (i) the treatment of archives for the purposes of historical study in all provinces of India and in such Indian States as might seek their advice; (ii) the scale and plan on which the cataloguing, calendaring and reprinting of each class of documents should be undertaken; (iii) the sums required for encouraging research and publication in respect of unpublished documents; (iv) the extent to which and the manner in which documents should be open to inspection by the public; and (v) the training of Indian students from the Universities in methods of historical research and the selection of competent editors and assistants for the publication of documents. The Government of India have also arranged to place at the disposal of their Department of Education, when the financial conditions improve, a grant of money, the distribution of which would be effected annually after consultation with the Commission.

9. In order to enable the Commission to follow the progress of the work in the various record offices, the Government of India desire that each officer in charge of a record office containing archives of historical interest should submit annually to the local Government concerned a very brief report containing information as to the work done in respect of cataloguing, calendaring, reprinting, indexing and weeding of all the older records and the use made by the public of the facilities afforded by the record offices. If the officer in charge exercises supervision over district records also, a brief note on the results of that supervision may be added to his report.

10. Among the difficulties attendant on historical research in India, the most prominent is the fact that documents are scattered, with the result that the student even of a single subject may have to prosecute his investigations at widely distant places. In Madras steps have already been taken to remedy this defect; district records previous to 1820 and, it is understood, certain other documents have been concentrated in the provincial Record Room. It is possible that other local Governments will follow their lead. The cataloguing and inspection of district records is in any case desirable. The larger question of removing the older records to a central office for all India has been considered from time to time, but has not unnaturally encountered opposition. The Government of India accordingly make no further suggestion on this subject at present, though the matter is one which the Indian Historical Records Commission will doubtless consider.

Order.—Ordered that a copy of this Resolution be forwarded to the local Governments and Administrations noted in the margin for information and guidance.

Madras, Bombay, Bengal, United Provinces, Bihar and Orissa, Punjab, Burma, Central Provinces, Assam, North-West Frontier Province, Coorg and Delhi.

Ordered also that a copy be forwarded to the Home Department, Finance Department, Public Works Department, Department of Revenue and Agriculture, Legislative Department, Foreign and Political Department, Department of Commerce and Industry, Railway Department (Railway Board), Army Department, Indian Munitions Board, Financial Adviser, Military Finance, and the Keeper of the Records of the Government of India, for information and guidance and that the Resolution be published in the supplement to the Gazette of India.

Under exports, Bengal showed an increase of 29 per cent, but Sind showed a decrease of 52 per cent, Burma of 31 per cent, Bombay of 27 per cent, and Madras of 38 per cent. These comparisons are with the preceding month (January, 1919).

In the eleven months ended February, 1919, the excess of exports over imports of private merchandise was R74,23 lakhs, as against R69,34 lakhs in the corresponding period of 1917-18 and R57,60 lakhs in the same period of 1913-14. As the publication of treasure figures has been temporarily discontinued, it is not possible to give here the net (private) exports from April to February, nor the net balance of trade in the same period. It may, however, be of interest to note that the net (private) exports were higher than those of 1917-18 and also of 1916-17. The balance of trade, so far as shown by the statistics of merchandise, treasure, Council Bills, and Enfaced Rupee paper in the eleven months ended February, 1919, was in favour of India, while in the corresponding period of 1917-18 it was against India. In the same period of 1916-17 the balance was in favour of India.

The amount of Council Bills and Telegraphic Transfers paid in India in the eleven months ended February, 1919, was R30,91 lakhs, of which R21,52 lakhs were paid through the Paper Currency Reserve and R9,39 lakhs through the Treasuries; but Reverse Council Bills were sold to the extent of R6,49 lakhs during the period, the net imports of funds by Council Bills thus amounting to Rs24,42 lakhs. In the eleven months ended February, 1918, the amount was Rs46,35 lakhs, of which Rs2,07 lakhs† were paid through the Gold Standard Reserve, Rs12,98 lakhs through the Paper Currency Reserve, and Rs31,30 lakhs through the Treasuries. In the eleven months ended February, 1917, the amount of Council Bills paid was Rs41,48 lakhs. As regards Enfaced Rupee paper, about Rs51 lakhs represented the amount of paper enfaced to London and over Rs24 lakhs the amount re-transferred from London in the eleven months, April, 1918, to February, 1919, while in the corresponding period of 1917-18, about Rs12 lakhs represented the amount of paper enfaced to London and Rs94 lakhs the amount re-transferred from London.

As regards tonnage, if a comparison be made with February, 1914, the corresponding pre-war month, it will be seen that there was a decrease in the tonnage of vessels cleared with cargoes of 307,861 tons or 45 per cent. The decrease in the entries (with cargoes) amounted to 237,684 tons or 46 per cent.

The shipping clearances with cargoes in the foreign trade from the ports of British India in the eleven months, April to February, 1918-19, as compared with the corresponding period of 1913-14, i.e., before the war broke out, were as follows :—

Proceedings of the Indian Legislative Council.

GOVERNMENT OF INDIA.

LEGISLATIVE DEPARTMENT.

THE PROVISIONS OF THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA ACT, 1915.
(5 & 6 Geo. V, Ch. 61.)

The Council met at the Council Chamber, Imperial Secretariat, Delhi, on Wednesday, the 12th March, 1919.

PRESENT :

His Excellency BARON CHELMSFORD, P.C., G.M.S.I., G.M.I.E., G.C.M.G., G.C.B.E., Viceroy and Governor General, presiding, and 61 Members, of whom 53 were Additional Members.

STATEMENT LAID ON THE TABLE.

The Hon'ble Sir C. Sankaran Nair :—" My Lord, I lay on the table a copy of certain correspondence regarding the Boy-scout movement, which was promised in reply to a question* asked by the Hon'ble Mr. Patel on the 18th September 1918." 11 A.M.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

The Hon'ble Mr. G. S. Khaparde asked :—

1. "(a) Are any members of the Territorial force employed as clerks in the various branches of the Army Department ?

(b) If so, what is the number of the Territorials so employed, and in what branches of the Army Department ?

11-1 A.M.
Territorials employed as clerks in various branches of the Army Department.

* Vide page 247 of Council Proceedings of 18th September, 1918.

(c) Will Government be pleased to place on the table a statement showing the total strength of the clerks in each branch of the Army Department, classified under the following heads :—

- (i) Senior grade.
- (ii) Junior grade.
- (iii) Territorials.
- (iv) Indians.
- (v) Permanent.
- (vi) Temporary.

(d) How many Superintendents are there in each branch of the Army Department, and out of them how many are Indians ? "

His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief replied :—

"The reply to item (a) of the Hon'ble Member's question is in the affirmative. With reference to (b) the total number employed is 281.

With reference to (c) and (d) a statement* is placed on the table embodying the information required."

Employment for wounded European officers and soldiers in India.

The Hon'ble Maharaja Sir Manindra Chandra Nandi asked :—

2. "What steps are being taken to secure employment in India for wounded European officers and soldiers ?"

His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief replied :—

"No special steps have been taken to find employment in India for wounded European officers and soldiers. All officers and soldiers, whether wounded or unwounded, seeking employment in civil life can apply for the same in England to the Ministry of Labour, and, in India, to the Central Employment and Labour Board."

Question
of placing sanitation under an independent Member or Board.

The Hon'ble Maharaja Sir Manindra Chandra Nandi asked :—

3. "Do Government propose to consider the advisability of separating sanitation and public health from the present portfolio of the Education Member, and placing them in charge of an independent Member or Board ?"

The Hon'ble Sir C. Sankaran Nair replied :—

"Government have no such intention. Should the general question of a re-arrangement of portfolios arise, the particular question of sanitation and public health would be considered as a part of it."

Employment of Indian apprentices at the workshops at Jamalpur.

The Hon'ble Maharaja Sir Manindra Chandra Nandi asked :—

4. "Have any arrangements been made for taking in Indian apprentices in the East Indian Railway Workshops at Jamalpur ?"

The Hon'ble Sir Arthur Anderson replied :—

"Under existing arrangements Indian apprentices are already taken for training at the East Indian Railway Workshops at Jamalpur.

The Hon'ble Member, however, probably refers to a new scheme, the details of which are being worked out. Under this scheme the Company proposes to take an additional number of Indians for training and to provide them with hostel accommodation and fuller facilities for technical education."

[12TH MARCH, 1919.]

[Nawab Saiyed Nawab Ali Chaudhuri, Khan Bahadur; Sir William Vincent; Sir Dinshaw Wacha; Sir James Meston; Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya; His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief; Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda.]

The Hon'ble Nawab Saiyed Nawab Ali Chaudhuri, Khan Bahadur, asked :—

An objectionable article in the "Epiphany."

5. "(a) Has the attention of Government been drawn to the correspondence published in the missionary paper, 'Epiphany,' of the 18th January, 1919, in which Islam, the Holy Quoran and the Holy Prophet have been most violently attacked, and to the Press Communiqué published by the Government of Bengal in this connection?

(b) Are Government aware of the excitement created in the Muslim community by the publication of the correspondence and the feeling of indignation and resentment among them?

(c) Is there any remedy in law against such publications? If not, do Government contemplate passing any legislation or Ordinance to provide such remedy?"

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent replied :—

"(a) The answer is in the affirmative.

(b) Government trust that the feeling of resentment on the part of the Muhammadan community which the publication of the letter in question provoked has been allayed by the expression of regret published by the Editor in the issue of the 'Epiphany' dated February 1st.

(c) In regard to the legal position, Government have nothing to add to the statement in the Press Communiqué issued by the Bengal Government. No legislation or Ordinance is contemplated."

The Hon'ble Sir Dinshaw Wacha asked :—

Purchase of silver by Government during the
year.

6. "What is the total amount of silver which Government expects to purchase during the current year, and what are the methods by which payments are made for such purchase?"

The Hon'ble Sir James Meston replied :—

"Payments for silver purchases are expected in the current year to aggregate £57 millions. Silver purchased in the market is paid for as usual from the cash balances of the Home Treasury. The manner in which silver obtained from America under the Pittman Act is paid for is stated in the concluding portion of paragraph 28 of the Narrative introducing the Financial Statement."

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya asked :—

Training of Indians at Sandhurst and Quetta College.

7. "(a) What is the total number of Indians who have been selected for training at Sandhurst?

(b) Have any arrangements been made for admitting Indians for training in the Quetta College?"

His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief replied :—

"(a) Five Indian cadets have actually been admitted to the Royal Military College, Sandhurst, for training, and a further five will shortly be selected.

(b) The answer is in the negative. The Quetta Cadet College was opened only to meet a special situation brought about by the war, and will be closed on the conclusion of the current course."

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda asked :—

Establishment of Government
High School
in Districts.

8. "(a) Is it the policy of the Government of India to maintain a Government high school in each district?

(b) Have all districts got a Government High School?

(c) If not, will Government state, province by province, the number of districts which are without such schools?

(d) Do Government propose to establish high schools in such districts?"

[Sir C. Sankaran Nair ; Mr. Malcolm N. Hogg ; [12TH MARCH, 1919.]
Sir Thomas Holland.]

The Hon'ble Sir C. Sankaran Nair replied :—

" (a) The policy of the Government of India, as regards the maintenance of Government high schools, was stated in paragraph 22 of the Government of India's Education Resolution No. 301-C. D., dated the 21st February, 1913. It is there described as the foundation of Government schools in such localities as may, on a survey of local conditions and with due regard to economy of educational effort and expense, be proved to require them.

(b) and (c) Full information is not available, but the statement* which I lay on the table will probably provide the Hon'ble Member with the information which he requires.

(d) The matter is one for consideration by the Local Governments."

The Hon'ble Mr. Malcolm N. Hogg asked :—

Rates of passages to Europe.

9. "(a) Is it a fact that the passage rates now being charged by the various steamer lines to Europe are the same, or approximately the same, as the rates which were in force immediately before the signing of the Armistice?

(b) Are Government aware that the present rates for passages are inflicting grave hardship on many Europeans, officials and non-officials, in India, and causing considerable discontent?

(c) Is it a fact that the average duration of the voyages from India to Marseilles, and from India to English ports, has considerably decreased since the signing of the Armistice?

(d) If the answer to (c) is in the affirmative, does the diminution of time represent a saving in the cost to the steamship companies of transporting each individual passenger?

(e) With reference to the speech with which His Excellency the Viceroy opened the present Session of Council, are Government in a position to give any further information as to the prospects of securing both a reduction in the passage rates and an increase in the amount of accommodation available, and as to the further steps which they propose to take for securing these ends?"

The Hon'ble Sir Thomas Holland replied :—

" Up to the end of last month no reduction had been made, so far as the Government of India are aware, in the passage rates charged by the various steamship lines between India and Europe since the signing of the Armistice. Government are aware of the hardship entailed thereby on passengers and of the facts referred to in parts (c) and (d) of the Hon'ble Member's question. The Government of India, with the sympathetic support of the Secretary of State, have been pressing this matter on the attention of the Home Government since the beginning of December, and an appreciable reduction in rates has now been secured, with effect from the 1st of March. Attempts are also being made to secure increased passenger accommodation, and for the Hon'ble Member's information I will read an extract from a telegram which we have just received from the Secretary of State. It runs as follows :—

' Ministry of Shipping report following additional accommodation for civilian passengers :—

" Ormonde "	400
" Thongwa "	270
" Kaiserihind "	200
" Moora "	100
" Dufferin "	500
Extra accommodation on " Manora ", " Merkara ",
" Nagoya ", " Mandala "	1,000
" Warturm " and " Rheinfels " 50 each.
" Teesta " also probably will be available.

[12TH MARCH, 1919.] [Sir Thomas Holland; Mr. Malcolm N. Hogg; Mr. Srinivasa Sastri; Sir C. Sankaran Nair.]

Ambulance transports will take increasing numbers of civilians for Marseilles. Lines have been asked to assist in every way by improving accommodation. Additional enemy tonnage will be obtained if possible.

It is impossible to say yet the dates on which these vessels will be available."

The Hon'ble Mr. Malcolm N. Hogg asked :—

10. "(a) Is it a fact that the S. S. 'Loyalty' has recently been purchased by a syndicate of private individuals in Bombay with a view to running her as a passenger steamer to England ?

Purchase of the steamer "Loyalty" by a syndicate.

(b) Is it a fact that negotiations have taken place or are taking place between Government and the syndicate regarding the commandeering by Government of a portion of the passenger accommodation on this steamer ?

(c) Will Government make a full statement of the facts regarding any such negotiations and of their intentions as to this steamer ? "

The Hon'ble Sir Thomas Holland replied :—

"(a) The answer is in the affirmative.

(b) No negotiations have taken place or are taking place between Government and the syndicate regarding the commandeering by Government of a portion of the passenger accommodation on this steamer. It may be added that an undertaking was given that the steamer shall be free from requisition for a period of six months from the date of purchase.

(c) Government have no intentions with regard to this steamer. I may say, however, that negotiations are now proceeding with the owners on the question whether they will come into the scheme for the control of passages."

The Hon'ble Mr. Srinivasa Sastri asked :—

11. "Will Government be pleased to state when the Report of the Calcutta University Commission will be published ? Is it a fact that they finished taking evidence many months ago ? "

Publication of report of the Calcutta University Commission.

The Hon'ble Sir C. Sankaran Nair replied :—

"The Calcutta University Commission are expected shortly to submit their Report to the Government of India, who will then consider the question of its publication. The Government of India have no definite information as to when the Commission finished taking evidence."

The Hon'ble Mr. Srinivasa Sastri asked :—

12. "Will Government be pleased to state whether they have passed orders on the scheme of provident funds for teachers which has been under their consideration for some years now ? If so, will Government be good enough to publish them ? "

Provident funds for teachers.

The Hon'ble Sir C. Sankaran Nair replied :—

"Local Governments and Administrations were consulted on the question of the establishment of provident funds for teachers in non-pensionable service, and the matter is still under consideration by the Government of India in the light of the opinions received. It is hoped to arrive at a decision shortly."

The Hon'ble Mr. Srinivasa Sastri asked :—

13. "(a) Is it a fact that the British Medical Association has addressed either the Secretary of State for India or the Government of India on the subject of the reorganisation of the Medical Services ?

Representation by the British Medical Association.

[Mr. Srinivasa Sastri ; His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief.]

[12TH MARCH, 1919.]

(b) Is it recommended in the representation of the British Medical Association that the Indian Medical Service should consist mostly of Europeans ?

(c) Will Government be good enough to publish the representation mentioned above ?

His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief replied :—

“(a) On the 27th of June last the Secretary of State for India received a deputation from the British Medical Association on the condition of the Indian Medical Service. The Government of India have received from the Secretary of State a copy of the Minutes of the Proceedings.

(b) The Minutes of the Proceedings contain no such recommendation.

(c) A copy* of the Minutes of the Proceedings is laid on the table.”

The Indian
Medical Service Committee.

The Hon'ble Mr. Srinivasa Sastri asked :—

14. “(a) Is it a fact that a Committee has recently been appointed to inquire and make recommendations as to the reorganisation of the Medical Services ?

(b) If so, will Government be pleased to publish the names of the members and the terms of reference ?

(c) Will Government be pleased, if they have not already done so, to add to its personnel one Indian member of the Indian Medical Service, and one Indian representative of the independent medical profession ?

(d) Will Government be pleased to publish the tentative schemes now before the Committee ?

(e) Will Government consider the desirability of directing that the Committee should conduct their inquiry in public ?”

His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief replied :—

“(a) The reply is in the affirmative.

(b) and (c) The attention of the Hon'ble Member is invited to the reply given to the first portion of the Hon'ble Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjea's question on the 7th instant.

(d) Government are not aware of the various tentative schemes that are being considered by the Committee, and do not consider that any useful purpose would be served by their publication at present.

(e) Government do not consider it necessary or desirable to fetter the Committee by laying down the manner in which they should conduct their enquiry.”

INDIAN DEFENCE FORCE (AMENDMENT) BILL.

11-10 A.M.

His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief :—“My Lord, I beg to move for leave to introduce a Bill to extend the period of operation of the Indian Defence Force Act, 1917, by a further period of six months. As indicated in the Statement of Objects and Reasons the extension of the period of operation of the Act is a purely ad interim measure, designed to meet immediate requirements pending settlement of the question of the constitution, organisation and training of the force which will be required to replace the Indian Defence Force under post-bellum conditions. This question is now under consideration, and Local Governments and Administrations, as well as the principal industrial and commercial bodies concerned, have been invited to express their views on the subject, through their representatives, at a Conference which it is proposed to hold during the present Legislative Session. It is improbable, however, that any scheme that may be decided upon can be brought into force before 31st March 1920. The object of the legislation now proposed is merely to tide over the period intervening between the expiration of the existing Act and the introduction of the new scheme ; no alteration in other respects of the provisions of the present Act is contemplated.

“ In recognition of the valuable service rendered by the Indian Defence Force during the war, orders were issued last December, in India Army Order No. 1054 for the suspension of compulsory training, other than musketry, for the remainder of the training year. In the coming year training must, of course, be resumed. It will not be necessary, however, to insist on quite the same high standard as was required when fighting was in progress ; and with a view to rendering the obligations imposed upon members of the force as little burdensome as possible, it is proposed to make important modifications in the Training Regulations.

“ Training in the Indian Defence Force consists of two parts, namely, preliminary training which is the instruction given to the recruit, and periodical training which is the instruction given to the trained soldier.

“ It is not proposed to make any changes in the preliminary training course, as this represents the minimum considered requisite.

“ On the other hand, the periodical training course will be considerably reduced. In the case of men under 41 obligatory instruction will be limited to ten days' training annually, a day being reckoned for drill purposes as four hours. Thus the number of hours' drill to be put in will be reduced from 160 to 40 hours per annum, exclusive of the annual course of musketry.

“ In the case of men of 41 and over, obligatory instruction will be limited to five days' training annually, the number of hours' drill to be put in being reduced from 70 to 20 hours per annum, exclusive of the annual course of musketry.

“ The minimum prescribed in each case will include the period spent in camp ; but it is proposed that attendance at camp should be optional.

“ The reduced courses of training now proposed must be regarded as the minimum compatible with the maintenance of a moderate standard of efficiency. I would not be able to recommend the changes now proposed but for the fact that the intensive instruction of the past year has enabled the Indian Defence Force to attain a much higher standard of training than was possible under the old Volunteer Regulations.

“ There are two other points which I should like to mention in connection with this subject. Shortly after the conclusion of the Armistice, Local Governments and General Officers Commanding were informed that leave, in and out of India, might be granted without restriction to all members of the Indian Defence Force. This sanction was for the year ending 31st March 1919, but it will now be continued throughout the ensuing year, with a view to its being incorporated in future Regulations, subject to rescission only in the event of an emergency.

“ The other point is that, though it may at times be necessary to call out officers and men of the Indian Defence Force in aid of the Civil Power, to assist in maintaining order or quelling riots, they must be relieved by regular troops at the earliest opportunity, so that this duty may not become burdensome or interfere unduly with their civil avocations. Standing orders to this effect have been issued to all General Officers Commanding.

“ It is remarked in the Statement of Objects and Reasons that it is considered necessary that there should be a force in India, during the period of demobilization, which can be called up in the event of emergency without interfering with the process of demobilization of the Regular Army. I am informed that in some quarters it is apprehended that this remark foreshadows a very wide and indefinite extension of the liabilities of the Indian Defence Force during the year. I can assure Hon'ble Members that such is not the intention of Government, and that there is no idea of placing any new burden or obligation on the Force. The main object in the inception of the latter was the relief of British battalions employed on garrison duties in India and required for active service. This object will now be relegated to the background and its revival cannot be contemplated, save in the presence of a grave emergency. It is intended that at all times the Indian Defence Force shall be regarded as a force to be employed only in a situation which demands men not to replace Regular troops but, on the contrary, to fill a gap when Regular troops are not available, either at all or in inadequate numbers, and then only for such time as will suffice for the relief of the Indian Defence Force by Regular troops.

"For the convenience of Hon'ble Members, a statement* has been prepared, comparing the present with the proposed courses of instruction, which I now lay on the table for general information."

The motion was put and agreed to.

His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief:—"My Lord, I beg to introduce the Bill, and move that the Bill, together with the Statement of Objects and Reasons relating thereto, be published in the Gazette of India in English."

The motion was put and agreed to.

INDIAN PAPER CURRENCY (AMENDMENT) BILL.

11-14 A.M.

The Hon'ble Sir James Meston:—"My Lord, I beg to move that the Bill further to amend the Indian Paper Currency (Amendment) Act, 1917, be taken into consideration. As I tried to explain when introducing the measure, its intention is not to provide for any further investments of the currency reserve, but to confirm investments already authorised under a special Ordinance passed by your Excellency. Now we hope that the turn of the tide has come, that no further investments will be necessary, and that it will be possible gradually to reduce those which have already been made."

The motion was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble Sir James Meston:—"My Lord, I beg to move that the Bill be now passed."

The motion was put and agreed to.

MOTOR SPIRIT (DUTIES) AMENDMENT BILL.

11-16 A.M.

The Hon'ble Sir James Meston:—"My Lord, I beg to move that the Bill to extend the operation of the Motor Spirit (Duties) Act, 1917, be taken into consideration. The Bill has been published and has evoked no opposition."

The motion was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble Sir James Meston:—"My Lord, I beg to move that the Bill be now passed."

The motion was put and agreed to.

[12TH MARCH, 1919.]

[Sir James Meston; His Excellency the President.]INDIAN INCOME-TAX (AMENDMENT) BILL.

The Hon'ble Sir James Meston:—"My Lord, I beg to move that the Bill to amend the Indian Income-tax Act, 1918, be taken into consideration. This Bill also, my Lord, has been published, and, I believe, it has met with general approval." 11-17 A.M.

The motion was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble Sir James Meston:—"My Lord, I beg to move that the Bill be now passed."

The motion was put and agreed to.

CRIMINAL LAW (EMERGENCY POWERS) BILL.

His Excellency the President:—"Before calling upon Sir William Vincent, I think it would be well if I were to inform the Council of a ruling which I have given on the question of the necessity of Members of a Select Committee, who wish to put in a dissenting minute, signing the Report." 11-18 A.M.

"I have had this matter examined and have found that it has been the usual practice in the work of this Council for all Members of a Select Committee, who wish to append a minute of dissent, to sign the Report, and the reason of this is obvious. The Council has a right to know that the correctness of the Report as an account of the proceedings of the Committee, irrespective of differences of opinion upon its details, is undisputed, and this can only be secured by the signature of the Members.

"In the case of Members desiring to put in a dissenting minute, their signature to the Report means nothing more than this that they agree to the correctness of the Report. This has been the established practice of this Council, and as the custodian of the usages and practice of this Council, I have no alternative but to rule that a Member of a Committee wishing to put in a dissenting minute, can only do so when he has affixed his signature to the Report. I am aware that there is one exception to the practice I have described, but on that occasion no question was raised and the President's orders were not taken. I can only regard this instance as the exception which proves the rule but in no sense affecting the general practice of this Council.

"Further, there is no precedent for a minority Report being admitted, for the simple reason that the principle of the Bill is affirmed when the Bill is referred to a Committee, and so no question of principle can arise on the Report.

"It goes without saying also that no Member of a Committee can invalidate a Report by refusing to sign.

"I am aware that under rule 7 it is open to the President to take the opinion of the Council upon such a point. The practice, however, is so clear that I do not propose to adopt this course, and therefore I cannot allow any discussion on it.

"I note that the first three motions on the paper are based on an alleged incompleteness of the Report. It follows, however, from the ruling which I have just given to the Council that the Report is in no sense invalidated or rendered incomplete by certain Members refusing to sign, or by the consequent exclusion of the minutes of dissent which they desired to attach.

"The first three motions on the paper challenge the Report on the ground of its incompleteness. It appears impossible for Hon'ble Members to support these motions without challenging my ruling. I shall, therefore, have to rule these first three motions to be out of order, when we come to them."

[Sir William Vincent.]

[12TH MARCH, 1919.]

11-21 A.M.

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—" My Lord, I beg to move that the Report of the Select Committee on the Bill to make provision in special circumstances to supplement the ordinary criminal law and for the exercise of emergency powers by Government be taken into consideration.

" My Lord, in addressing the Council on this motion, I do not propose to discuss in any detail the various modifications which have been made in the Bill by the Select Committee. They are clearly expressed in the Bill itself, and, I think, explained in the Report. But there are some matters of some importance to which I must refer. It will be within the memory, I think, of many Hon'ble Members of this Council that on the last occasion on which this Bill was under discussion, the Government gave three undertakings in respect of this Bill. The first undertaking was to make the Bill a temporary measure instead of a permanent one, in the hope that the Reform proposals from which so much is expected may do something to remove the danger which is now experienced from these conspiracies.

" In the second place, I promised to make more apparent what was already abundantly clear to my mind the fact that the application of the Bill was strictly confined to the activities of revolutionary and anarchical conspirators.

" In the third place, I promised to consider any other modifications in the Bill which non-official Members might wish to put forward in so far as I could do so without rendering the Bill ineffective for the purpose for which it was intended. My Lord, I contend that all these three undertakings have been amply fulfilled. The operation of the Bill has been limited to three years, and in the Preamble and the opening sections of the different parts of the Bill, Hon'ble Members will find modifications made which indicate clearly that the application of the Bill is rigidly restricted to movements of the character to which I have referred. In addition to this, in deference to the wishes of various Hon'ble Members, we have made a number of substantial modifications in the Bill. The Government regret that they could not go further to meet the wishes of Hon'ble Members in this matter, but they trust those Members of this Council who were in the Select Committee will admit that the Government has approached the case with the greatest care, and has been reasonable in its attitude towards those Members who put forward proposals for modifications of the Bill. If it had been possible to meet Hon'ble Members further, no one would have been more rejoiced than myself, but there are responsibilities which the Government of India have for the welfare of this country, for the maintenance of peace and tranquillity which they cannot subordinate to any other consideration.

" While I am on this subject, my Lord, I should like to advert to an insinuation that has been made that there was some form of compact or agreement between the Government and individual Members of this Council. It is my duty to repudiate that suggestion in the most emphatic terms. It is always the desire of Government to secure the co-operation of the Members of this Council, and more especially in a measure of this importance upon which the welfare of this country so much depends, and if by making the modifications we had been able to secure the support of Members, as I said before, Government would have been more than pleased. But there never was any agreement or compact, there was no compact entered into of any kind, and it is, to my mind, much to be regretted that any suggestion of that character should have been made.

" My Lord, I do not desire to-day to go over the whole of the old ground which was traversed at the last debate, but there are some weighty considerations to which I ask the earnest attention of the Members of this Council before I close my speech. I want the Members of this Council to believe that the Government is perfectly sincere in its conviction as to the urgent necessity of this Bill, that there is no Machiavellian plot at all against political agitation, and that there is no intention whatever to frustrate or defer the advent of reforms.

" Indeed, your Excellency, as one of the authors of the Reforms Report, would, I think, be the last to have allowed this Bill to be introduced had such a result been possible. We seek to safeguard India from criminal movements which though affecting a very small portion of the population have done much to discredit the loyalty of the great body of the citizens in the past. Finally, I want to make it clear that this Bill is not a Bill which will come into general operation. It cannot be applied indiscriminately all over India. It can only come into operation in certain circumstances of a special character, and then only in areas in which these revolutionary or anarchical movements are prevalent. Further, in those areas it cannot be used in any way to attack the liberties of the law-abiding citizen. It can only be employed against criminals whose activities are really a menace to the whole State, and even in dealing with these men, every effort, so far as we could do so without rendering the Bill wholly ineffective, has been made to prevent any other than those manifestly guilty from being touched under the provisions of the law. My Lord, if there are Members in this Council who accept the necessity for this measure, accept the facts that I have stated, if they are satisfied that Government has really gone as far as is possible to meet them in modifying the provisions of the Bill, I ask them in all earnestness to pause before they oppose a measure which is framed in our judgment in the best interests of this great country whose welfare we all have at heart."

His Excellency the President :—" Mr. Patel's is the first motion on the paper and as a consequence of my ruling, I am afraid it is out of order."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—" If your Excellency will hear me"

His Excellency the President :—" I can only hear you if you do not discuss my point of order."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—" Certainly. In the discussion of the motion that I have given notice of I will not at all touch your Excellency's ruling; I propose to discuss it from altogether a different point of view. I beg to move 'that the so-called Report of the Select Committee is both an incomplete and invalid document and it be therefore cancelled.'"

The Hon'ble Sir George Lowndes :—" My Lord, I beg to point out that the Hon'ble Member has already infringed your Excellency's ruling. He has moved an amendment that the Report is incomplete while it has been ruled from the Chair that the Report is complete."

His Excellency the President :—" I am waiting until the Hon'ble Member shows me how the Report is incomplete. If he says it is incomplete in the fashion in which I have ruled that it is complete, I shall rule the Hon'ble Member out of order."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—" I am much obliged to your Excellency. The Report of the Select Committee is both an invalid and an incomplete document. At the first meeting of the Select Committee, two preliminary points were raised. The first was whether the Select Committee could consider the principles of the Bill and recommend to the Council that the Bill should be dropped, and the second was whether the Select Committee could recommend to the Council that it was not within the competence of the Indian Legislative Council to enact the proposed law. The Chairman of the Committee gave his ruling that the Select Committee had no power to go into the principles of the Bill, and in his opinion the duty of the Committee was restricted to the examination of the several clauses of the Bill and the recommending of such alterations and amendments as it might think appropriate. With due deference to the high authority of the Hon'ble the Law Member, I respectfully submit that his ruling was wrong and probably misled several Hon'ble Members of the Committee into erroneous views as to their rights and duties as Members of the Select Committee

His Excellency the President :—"On which point, Mr. Patel? I have ruled on the point that you cannot discuss the principles of the Bill in Select Committee. That ruling is as old as 1866, when Sir Henry Maine clearly laid it down that the principle was decided when a Bill was referred to a Committee, and that in the Committee it was only the points of detail that could be considered. Please confine yourself to the other point that they were not competent."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—"I take it then that I cannot challenge the ruling of the Chairman of the Select Committee on that ground."

His Excellency the President :—"Not on the ground that you cannot discuss the question of principle."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—"The second question raised was whether it was within the competence of the Select Committee to recommend to the Council that the Indian Legislative Council had no power to enact such a law. . . ."

His Excellency the President :—"That I should rule also was out of order, as the Committee were only the servants of this Council and the Council referred this Bill to the Committee to report to them on the details of the Bill and not on the competence of the Council to bring the Bill forward."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—"If that is so, I bow to your Excellency's ruling and have nothing more to say."

His Excellency the President :—"I am afraid Mr. Patel has not convinced me that this motion is not out of order and, therefore, I must rule it is out of order. Mr. Khaparde, have you anything further to say? Be careful."

11-34 A.M.

The Hon'ble Mr. G. S. Khaparde :—"Very careful. The second paragraph of the Report of the Select Committee is as follows:—

'Before we proceed to set out the modifications of detail which we have made in the Bill we may state at once that we do not propose to refer to the numerous amendments which were suggested in the Bill in so far as they were destructive of the general principles of the Bill. Amendments of this kind should be brought forward in Council which is the appropriate arena for their discussion.'

So this Report says that there were certain amendments moved which in the opinion of the learned Chairman of the Select Committee were destructive of the principle of the Bill, whatever that may be. These amendments have not been mentioned in the Report. I wish they had been so that the Hon'ble Council could judge whether they really were destructive of the principle of the Bill. Your Excellency would have liked to know what those amendments were and the reasons for which they could not be admitted. Another reason which, I think, is important is, that this Report by itself, seeing that it has not embodied certain amendments that were proposed, shows that it is incomplete in itself, and that being incomplete. . . .

His Excellency the President :—"That is the same point put in a different way, Mr. Khaparde."

The Hon'ble Mr. G. S. Khaparde :—"I am very sorry, your Excellency."

[12TH MARCH, 1919.] [The President ; Mr. G. S. Khaparde ; Rai Bahadur B. D. Shukul ; Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjea.]

His Excellency the President :—“I do not wish to interrupt you, but I wish to appreciate your point before I rule you out of order.”

The Hon'ble Mr. G. S. Khaparde :—“I thank your Excellency.

* ‘That the Report of the Select Committee be not taken into consideration as it is incomplete.’ My point of order* is that it is like a conversation that is recorded in Boswell’s ‘Life of Johnson.’ There was some talk, I believe, about the abridgment of a report and Mr. Boswell suggested that this abridgment of the report was merely a cow with its tail cut off. Then Dr. Johnson replied ‘No, it is not that; it is a cow reduced to the proportions of a calf.’ That is to say you let all the parts remain; you let them be where they are, only reduce them in proportion and present them in a smaller form. I take it that the Report of the Select Committee means all that took place in the Select Committee and the final conclusions that they arrived at. It does not mean the omission of any particular part, and in so far as this Report admits that so many things have been kept out of it, I am obliged to submit that I have made out my case that it is incomplete.”

His Excellency the President :—“I am afraid I cannot agree with you, Mr. Khaparde. At any rate it was ultra vires of the Committee to discuss the principles of the Bill. The Chairman of the Committee ruled in the Committee that certain amendments went to the principle of the Bill. I laid down in the ruling just now that it was beyond the competence of the Committee to discuss the principles of the Bill, because those principles were settled when this Council in its wisdom referred the Bill to the Committee. I am not prepared to dispute the ruling of the Chairman of the Committee who was fully within his competence to make the ruling in the Committee itself, and I am afraid I must also rule your motion out of order.”

The Hon'ble Rai Bahadur B. D. Shukul :—“Since I must 11-38 A.M.

† ‘That the Bill be re-committed to the Select Committee to complete its report.’ bow to your Excellency’s ruling, I need say nothing more on the point.†

The Hon'ble Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjea :—“My Lord, I 11-39 A.M. have the honour to move the following amendment :—

‘That the Select Committee’s Report, together with the Bill and connected papers, be referred to Local Governments, High Courts and public bodies for criticisms.’

“My Lord, before I make my remarks on this amendment, your Excellency will perhaps permit me to express my acknowledgments to the Hon'ble the Home Member for repudiating in the most definite and emphatic manner the misrepresentation which has found considerable currency in the newspapers that there was a compact, some sort of an agreement, between a section of this Council and the Government in regard to the provisions of this Bill. That was an absolute misrepresentation. We tried to correct it in the newspapers; but a lie is hydra-headed; it dies hard. I hope and trust that after this specific statement of the Hon'ble the Home Member, the misrepresentation will not be allowed to disfigure the columns of any newspaper.

“My Lord, my amendment follows the lines of the recommendation which we made in a joint note of dissent signed by my friends, the Hon'ble Mr. Sastri and the Hon'ble Mr. Shafi, and myself. We recommended in that joint note that the Report of the Select Committee, the Bill and all connected papers therewith, meaning the notes of dissent, be referred to the High Courts, the Local Governments and public bodies for criticisms. My Lord, upon this point there was absolute unanimity of opinion among the non-official Members of the Select Committee; they all voted in favour of it. I hope that the same unanimity of opinion will prevail among the non-official Members of this Council including our European colleagues. My Lord, in a matter of this kind I venture to submit that Indian opinion ought to go far in determining the attitude and the action of the

[Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjee.]

[12TH MARCH, 1919.]

Government. The legislation which you have undertaken is legislation which affects, seriously affects, a section, it may be a small and microscopic section, but only a section, of the Indian community. I think, my Lord, therefore, our voice ought to form a paramount factor in any decision which the Government may arrive at in regard to this matter. My Lord, I desire to repeat what I have so often said—it is necessary to repeat this in season and out of season—that we are as anxious as the Government could possibly be for the maintenance of law and order and the eradication of anarchical and revolutionary movements. They can do us no good; they have done us grievous harm; they constitute a serious menace to our political progress; they cast a slur upon our fair name and fame, upon our reputation as a law-abiding people. My Lord, we realise the gravity of the situation and the measure of our responsibility in advising the Government to pause and to wait; but we feel that the Government will accord to our advice the weight to which it is entitled as representing the voice and the considered judgment of my countrymen. My Lord, your Excellency's Government has not been insensible, I am happy to be able to say, to the expression of public opinion. It was in partial deference to that opinion that the Bill has been made a temporary measure, that its scope has been restricted to anarchical and revolutionary movements, and that modifications have been made in some of its provisions. But, my Lord, public opinion is not satisfied. I am here to re-echo the voice of the saner section of my countrymen. Public opinion is not satisfied. We want the Government to pause and to reconsider the situation. And what could be more reasonable than that the Government should obtain and receive further light, further guidance, not from irresponsible critics, but from its accredited advisers, namely, the Local Governments, the High Courts and the recognised public bodies? My Lord, my amendment contemplates this and in moving it, my Lord, I am fortified by the action of the Government itself. You are prepared to postpone the consideration of the other Bill, which proposes to make a permanent addition to the law of the land. I submit that there is absolutely no reason why a similar, and indeed the same, procedure should not be followed in this case. I recognise that this is an emergent measure, but, my Lord, you possess full plenary emergent powers to deal with revolutionary and anarchical crimes, powers far more summary, far more drastic, than what is contemplated under the provisions of this Bill. But then it will be said, and it has been said, that if my amendment were accepted, there would be delay and the consequent prolongation of the agitation. My Lord, I am prepared to accept this view only in a limited and partial sense. I am free to admit that there will be agitation, that the agitation will be continued; but it will be allayed, it will not be the same sort of agitation that we are witnessing now. It will be a weak and feeble, a dead-and-alive sort of agitation, without life, without vitality. This concession to public opinion will have placed the public mind in a conciliatory mood. My Lord, I know something about political agitations. I am conversant, thoroughly conversant, with that game. My Lord, when the history of these times comes to be written, and if they care to remember such an insignificant personality as myself, they will set me down as perhaps the most obstinate, the most incorrigible, the most unyielding of political agitators of my time. I was associated with the greatest political agitation that this generation has witnessed, namely, that relating to the modification of the Partition of Bengal. My Lord, I was in the forefront of that fight. My Hon'ble friend Mr. Emerson knows all about it. Well, the Government of Lord Curzon and his advisers thought that if the Partition was carried out, if it was an accomplished fact, nothing further would be heard about it, and that the people would acquiesce in it, and the agitation would cease. There never was a more grievous blunder. The partition was carried out in hot haste without giving the people time to consider the situation, in view of its more recent developments. The agitation was continued, it spread like wildfire from town to town, from district to district, the whole country was ablaze with excitement; and a conflagration was set up, the expiring flames of which still linger in those revolutionary and anarchical movements to grapple with which this Council is assembled here to-day. I am anxious, my Lord, that this dismal chapter of our history may not be repeated. There is some chance, my Lord, of its being repeated if you do not give adequate time to the public to consider the situation.

“ My Lord, ‘ Truth,’ says the Latin proverb, ‘ is the daughter of Time.’ Veritas est filia ætatis. Time is a great pacifier, a great mollifier. Put this case to that supreme of all tests, the crucible of time. Allow the public bodies to record their opinions, the High Courts to pronounce their judgments, and there is no institution in the land more venerated, which inspires a larger measure of confidence than these great tribunals of British justice, and you will have created an atmosphere free from prejudice and excitement favourable to the dispassionate consideration of the grave issues involved in this Bill. My Lord, the Government says that the Bill is not severe, it is not drastic, it is not a menace to public rights and, as the Hon’ble the Home Member has just observed, that no one need concern himself about it unless he be an anarchist or revolutionary. On the other hand, the public hold a wholly different view; they say that the Bill is pregnant with danger, and the magnitude of the public fears and apprehensions may be gauged from the fact that Mr. Ghandi has been able to start a campaign of passive resistance against the Bills. You and I may condemn it, but it is an index of the situation, and we have to allay that situation. The proper solvent would be the abandonment of the Bill or its postponement until the Reforms proposals have become the law of the land. But as the Government is not prepared to do that, I submit that it is the supreme duty of Government to allow the public bodies to express their opinions, and the High Courts and Local Governments to pronounce their judgments, and thus help to bring about a better state of things than that which prevails at the present moment.

“ And, my Lord, where is the necessity for hurry? You have got the Defence of India Act. It will be in operation six months after the conclusion of peace. That will bring us down, on a moderate computation, to the 31st December 1919, and by that time this Bill, even if postponed to the Simla Session now in order to enable a reference being made to Local Governments and High Courts, will have become the law of the land.

“ My Lord, there is also another argument which I desire to place for the consideration of your Excellency’s Government in support of my amendment. The Reforms proposals will have been introduced in the form of a Bill in Parliament after probably the Easter recess, that is to say, towards the end of April. If the Bill is a proper one—and I have no doubt it will be a proper one—it will have a soothing effect on the Indian public, and Indian public opinion will be in a less excited mood to consider a Bill of this kind. At the present moment moral and social forces of an irresistible character are arrayed against it. I desire that they may be enlisted in your behalf; that they will be enlisted in your behalf I have no doubt if you will give them a chance, if you allow the Bill to be introduced in Parliament and these various public institutions to speak out their minds. When by waiting a little, you secure such a large advantage, it seems to me, my Lord with all respect, that it is unwise and inexpedient to hurry the Bill through this Session. I can well imagine your difficulties. The Government and the people are alike interested in passing the Reforms scheme through Parliament. The reactionaries in England are taking the fullest advantage of the Report of the Rowlatt Commission. They will try to block the way. They will perhaps say ‘ Deal with the anarchists first, and then we shall allow the Reforms Bill to pass through Parliament.’ My Lord, to this you have an unanswerable reply. You have the Defence of India Act. The Defence of India Act does not expire till the 31st December 1919, according to my computation, and by that time you will have fortified yourself with this Bill which will have become law in the month of September next. My Lord, you have to look to English opinion, but you have also to look to Indian opinion, and to Indian opinion as profoundly influencing the trend of English public opinion.

“ My Lord, I do not know that I need detain this Council any longer. To accept this amendment would be wise and expedient, it would mollify the situation. My Lord, it would be no sign of weakness but of strength. It would be the expression of a deferential attitude towards public opinion, which would gratify public opinion. It will help to dissipate the clouds of mistrust and suspicion which to-day hang thick and dark over the public mind of India. Above all, my Lord, it would be worthy of a great Government now about to enter upon a new period of responsibility in conformity with the spirit of its own gracious message, and the immemorial traditions of British rule in India.

“ With these observations, I desire to commend my amendment to the acceptance of this Council. ”

11-55 A.M.

The Hon'ble Khan Bahadur Mian Muhammad Shafi :—

“ My Lord, I rise to offer my cordial support to the motion which has been placed before the Council by my friend the Hon'ble Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjea with his usual earnestness and eloquence. I acknowledge with pleasure and gratitude the most conciliatory attitude which was adopted by the official majority in the Select Committee towards some of the amendments which the Indian Members of the Select Committee placed before them for their consideration. They met us more than half-way, but in so far as this particular motion is concerned, as has already been mentioned by the Hon'ble Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjea, the official majority overruled the unanimous recommendation of the non-official Members of the Select Committee. It has thus become necessary for my Hon'ble friend to place before this Council the same proposal which was placed before the Select Committee and supported by the unanimous non-official vote.

“ My Lord, I support the motion before the Council on three principal grounds.

“ The first ground is this. Under ordinary circumstances, in accordance with the usual procedure of this Council, this particular Bill on its introduction would have been published in the official gazette and circulated for opinion amongst the Local Governments as well as among representative bodies. That procedure was not adopted in the first instance. We contend that that procedure ought to be adopted now ; that the Report of the Select Committee should be circulated amongst Local Governments, High Court Judges and public bodies for opinion. My Lord, it is my humble submission that departure from the ordinary procedure, as invariably observed in this Council, is justified only in cases of emergency, and I contend that no emergency of the kind which would warrant such departure has arisen in the present case. My Lord, I belong to a school of Indian politics the members of which, because of their deep-rooted feeling that the future welfare of their country lies within the British Empire, have always consistently and readily supported the Government in all cases of emergency with reference to every measure that the Government has thought fit to adopt in order to meet such emergency. We have never hesitated, even at the risk of personal danger, to support the Government on occasions like these. Had it been pointed out in the last debate in this Council, had it been pointed out to us in the Select Committee that an emergency of this kind had arisen, and had facts been placed before us which would have convinced us not only that the emergency had already arisen, but even that there was a fear, an immediate fear, of such an emergency arising, I for one would have been only too ready to give my support to the Government for the immediate enactment of this measure. But, my Lord, no facts were placed before us either in this Council or in the Select Committee calculated to convince us that such an emergency had arisen. My Lord, a hint has been thrown out that a certain class of people in a certain part of the country who are now interned will at no distant date have to be released. With reference to that class of people may I remind the Council that in the Provincial Legislative Council of Bengal only the other day an Indian member brought forward a Resolution for their immediate release, and the whole of that Council, except the mover of the Resolution, absolutely opposed such a motion and negatived the Resolution, so much so

[12TH MARCH, 1919.]

[Sir William Vincent ; Khan Bahadur Mian Muhammad Shafi.]

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"I think the Hon'ble Member is not quite correct in saying that they opposed the motion. They abstained from speaking or voting on it; I think that is the furthest they went."

The Hon'ble Khan Bahadur Mian Muhammad Shafi:—"With all deference, if my recollection is correct one Indian Member (or two) very strongly opposed that Resolution. And after carefully reading those speeches I personally am convinced that they were perfectly in the right in opposing that Resolution. There was no justification made out by the mover in support of his proposal that those internees should be released. Well, my Lord, in any case the mover of the Resolution stood all by himself and the Resolution was in consequence rejected; so that even the local Council of that particular province is not in favour of the release of the internees in that part of the country. The Defence of India Act is still in force and will continue to be in force for six months after the conclusion of peace. It is clear, therefore, that no emergency of the kind which would justify an absolute departure from the ordinary procedure of this Council, which has invariably been observed in the past, has arisen; and, in consequence, I submit that on this first ground the motion placed before the Council by my Hon'ble and learned friend is worthy of acceptance. The second ground on which I support this motion is this. The feeling against the hurrying through of this measure through Council as voiced in the country is both widespread as well as deep. My Lord, I was a Member of a Legislative Council before the Morley-Minto reform scheme. Since then I have been a Member either of a Provincial Legislative Council or of this Imperial Legislative Council continuously without a single break for the last ten years. During my experience as a Member of a Provincial Council, as well as of this Council, I do not recollect a single occasion on which a Government measure has been opposed with such complete unanimity, complete unanimity amongst non-official Members belonging to every class and every shade of political opinion as in this particular instance. And believe me that this complete unanimity is an absolutely correct indication of the feeling as it exists in the country from north to south, and east to west. My Lord, even those members of the public who recognise that the proposal for passive resistance advocated by Mr. Gandhi is not only absolutely unjustifiable, but is one which every right-minded citizen of the Empire should have no hesitation in condemning are opposed to this Bill. To-day I have received telegrams informing me that the Provincial Muslim Association of the Punjab and the United Provinces Muslim Defence Association at Allahabad have already condemned that movement, but it is significant that even these in the resolutions which they have adopted have expressed their disapproval of the Rowlatt Bills. This significant fact is, I submit, conclusive evidence of the submission which I have made to your Excellency and to your Excellency's Government that feeling in the country is absolutely unanimous against the hurrying through of this measure in the manner contemplated. I venture to submit it is in the highest degree inadvisable to ignore that feeling and to seek to pass this measure in this Session without inviting the opinion of Local Governments, High Courts and representative bodies.

"The third ground on which I support the motion placed before the Council by my venerable friend, is based upon political expediency. There are members of your Excellency's Government occupying the ministerial benches amongst whom there are statesmen, administrators, for whose political insight I have had the highest opinion ever since I came into contact with them. I appeal to them whether, in the circumstances I have described, it is politically expedient to proceed further with the measure without inviting the opinions of the authorities mentioned in the motion. I appeal to them with all the earnestness at my command, I appeal to your Excellency with all the earnestness at my command, as a sincere well-wisher of your Excellency's Government, whether it is politically expedient to adopt the course which you propose to adopt. It is, believe me, as a sincere well-wisher of the British connection that I make that appeal and I trust that the appeal will not go unheeded."

12-8 P.M.

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda :—"My Lord, as the next amendment* which stands in my name is much the same as this, I think with your Excellency's permission it would be convenient and save time if I spoke on the Resolution now. The grounds on which I intended to ask for republication of this Bill have mostly been placed before the Council in the two eloquent speeches which we have just listened to. I entirely associate myself with these speeches, except in regard to a small passage in the speech of my Hon'ble friend Mr. Shafi. There was a Resolution moved in the Bengal Council by the Hon'ble Mr. Dutt in which he asked the Government to grant a general amnesty to all the persons in confinement. That was opposed by the Government and two Bengali gentlemen also spoke. The Hon'ble Sir Henry Wheeler speaking on behalf of the Bengal Government opposed the Resolution, but he admitted that the position in Bengal had improved and he said that the Government had let out more than two-thirds of the persons interned and that there were only 365 left. It was further contemplated to grant home domicile to some. This point is not exactly the same as it was put

The Hon'ble Khan Bahadur Mian Muhammad Shafi :—"My Lord, I have the official proceedings in my hand and there it is said 'the Resolution was then put and lost.' "

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda :—"I simply wanted to point out there was no close connection between the point and the motion before the Council. However, this is not a matter that we need quarrel about. As regards Bengal there is the admission of the Bengal Government that the position had very much improved. But leaving that aside and coming to the motion before us, in addition to the grounds which have been placed before the Council in such eloquent terms by the Hon'ble Mr. Banerjea and the Hon'ble Mr. Shafi, I wish to add one or two, in the first place rule 25 of the Rules for the Conduct of Legislative Business says 'The Select Committee shall, in their report, state whether or not in their judgment the Bill has been so altered as to require re-publication.' If the Council will take the trouble to inquire they will find that in the Bill consisting of 42 clauses and a Schedule 65 alterations have been made by the Select Committee; and no less than 25 of the clauses of the Bill have been amended, the Titles, both short and long, the Preamble and the Schedule have also been changed. You cannot say that there have not been substantial amendments in the Bill. The majority of the Select Committee say in their report 'it will be observed that all the amendments that we have made in the Bill are amendments in favour of the subject.' I shall show presently that this statement is not correct. It is erroneous, and I invite the Council to refer to clause 20 of the Bill as originally drafted and as amended. Clause 20 of the Bill as originally drafted says 'If the Governor General in Council is satisfied that movements which are in his opinion likely to lead to the commission of offences against the State are being extensively promoted'. That is to say 'offences against the State'. These offences are defined in clause 2 of the Bill. It means offences in Chapter VI of the Indian Penal Code. Chapter VI, I may inform the Council, consists of 11 sections, 21 to 30 plus 124-A. Now in clause 20 as revised it is said 'If the Governor General in Council is satisfied that anarchical or revolutionary movements which are in his opinion likely to lead to the commission of scheduled offences are being extensively promoted'. In place of offences against the State we find scheduled offences. What are these? We refer to the Schedule and find in the revised Bill the following appears 'Any offence under sections 124-A, 148, 153-A, 302, 304, 326, 327, 329, 332, 333, 385, 386 and so on. I will not weary the Council by enumerating them all. Then further it says 'any offence under the Explosive Substances Act' and 'any offence under section 20 of the Indian Arms Act.' This, my Lord, is not a trifling matter. What does it mean? It means that you are placing the liberty of the subject at the mercy of the executive. You are empowering the prosecutor to exact a bond from the accused to keep the peace. You will enable the prosecutor to compel the accused to dance attendance at police-stations. You empower him to place a man in confinement at any place he pleases, no matter whether the place is very insanitary, no matter whether the climate is unsuited to his constitution, the place may be infested with tigers or poisonous snakes. I am not drawing on my imagination, I actually have such a case in mind. No doubt the taking of a bond is in the Code, but the order is passed by a judicial authority, and the man has a right of appeal, if necessary, up to the High Court. This power has been taken away and you empower the executive to take this action against him.

[12TH MARCH, 1919.] [Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda.]

"And what has the Select Committee done? They claim that all the amendments which they have made are to the advantage or for the benefit of the accused. Is that so, my Lord? I will just show to the Council that there are 50 offences more than in the original Bill, the commission of which will entitle the Government to put this part of the Bill into operation. Is it correct to say that all the amendments that you have made are to the benefit of the accused, and can you, on this ground, refuse to republish the Bill? That is my first submission, my Lord.

"Now, in the second place, we have just heard both from the Hon'ble Mr. Banerjea and Mr. Shafi that the whole of the Indian members are unanimous in asking for the republication of the Bill, and as the Hon'ble Mr. Banerjea has pointed out, it is the Indian public opinion in a matter like this which counts.

"Now assuming that the claim made by the majority Report is correct, and that all the amendments that have been made are in favour of the subject, what then? There is no rule which says that you should republish the Bill only when the amendments are against the subject. He is not the only person concerned. What about the estimable gentlemen of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce, what about Lord Sydenham and Sir Valentine Chirol. Supposing I had a power-of-attorney from any of them could I not demand that the Bill be published. Of course you may say that it is a very technical matter, merely a point of law. But a point of law cannot be ignored when you are making a law. And I submit that even after the publication of the Report of the Select Committee, we are entitled to ask that the Bill should be re-published.

"Now coming to the most substantial objection, my Lord, what is the object of the publication of a Bill? My Hon'ble friend Mr. Shafi has pointed out that by adopting a certain course regarding the introduction of the Bill in the Council under rule 23 of the Rules for the Conduct of the Legislative Business you avoided discussion of the Bill at a certain stage. Now I wish to amplify it a little. What is the object of the publication of a Bill? It cannot be anything else than an invitation to the public, to the people concerned, to examine the Bill, to see if the provisions of the Bill will suit the conditions of the locality or the community to which it will apply, to see if any modifications are required. Surely it will take some time. They must study the Bill, see the case of the Government for introducing that Bill, consult the opinion of those who can give them competent advice in regard to a matter like this, and then formulate their views and publish them either in the press or send them direct to this Council or to the Hon'ble Members of this Council. Now, my Lord, in this connection may I also point out some clause in the rules for the conduct of the business of this Council which says that the Report shall be made not sooner than three months. The rule says 'such Report shall be made not sooner than three months from the date of the first publication in the Gazette of India.' This shows that you must not report within three months

[Sir George Lowndes; Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda.] [12TH MARCH, 1919.]

The Hon'ble Sir George Lowndes:—"My Lord, I regret to interrupt the Hon'ble Member. It is a most objectionable practice to read only half of a rule and leave out important words. My Hon'ble friend Mr. Chanda stopped reading that portion of the rule when he came to the words 'unless the Council orders the report to be made sooner.' "

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda:—"I stopped there because I intended just to emphasise the intention of the rule which is that the Committee shall not report within three months unless the Council orders the report to be made sooner. But the usual course is that the Committee shall not report before three months. But what is the intention of this rule? It is simply to give the public ample time to consider the matter. What have you done in this case? In the first place, as my Hon'ble friend Mr. Shafi has pointed out, you have departed from the usual form and under rule 23 of the Rules for the Conduct of Legislative Business published the Bill together with the Statement of Objects and Reasons which accompany it. The rule says 'The Governor General, if he sees fit, may order the publication of a Bill, together with the Statement of Objects and Reasons which accompanies it, in such Gazettes and languages as he thinks necessary, although no motion has been made to introduce the Bill'. But that is not usually done. The usual course is to ask for leave to introduce the Bill and then introduce it. Even apart from this, we usually find there are three stages during which, if the usual course is followed, the public have a right to express their views. In the first place, we find that before introducing a Bill, it is first referred to the Local Governments for opinion and also to the public for opinion, thus the Government of India obtain the views of the Local Governments and of the public in the first instance. That is the first stage, and the public have a right to express their views on any measure brought forward by the Government. We know it is frequently done, and I myself had the honour during the last years of being called upon to express my views on matters which have engaged the attention of the Council.

"The second stage is when these reports are received, they are published in the form of a Bill, and then the Member in charge of it asks for leave to introduce the Bill and the Bill is introduced, discussed and passed. There is also another process, which is not always followed but sometimes followed, that is to say, after receiving the Reports of the Local Governments, the Government of India sometimes convenes small committees or conferences to discuss these matters. For instance, this course was followed last September as regards the Bill to amend the Provincial Insolvency Act, and I had the honour of being invited to serve on the Committee. In that Committee all the various questions were discussed and then the Bill was drafted. In some cases such a course is not followed, but still the public have an opportunity of expressing their views on any matter that may be engaging the attention of the Government.

"Then the next stage comes. The Bill after it is introduced in the Council is then circulated for opinion, and then the motion is made for reference to a Select Committee. There the matter is again fully discussed; the public express their views which are placed before Government.

"Now here what are the processes that have been followed in regard to this Bill? We at once just jumped into the third stage when the Hon'ble the Home Member moved for reference to the Select Committee on the 6th ultimo. One cannot understand what is the great urgency in regard to this matter that the Government should have been compelled to adopt the extraordinary course that they have followed. Why is it so? If there was any measure, my Lord, in this Session that was extremely urgent, that was the Excess Profits Duty Bill. You had to pass it this time, otherwise you cannot pass your Budget. As a matter of fact we have already incorporated the estimated proceeds of this duty in the Financial Statement. Therefore that was a matter of great urgency. On the other hand, Government had never thought of this matter till the other day because in September last we knew the Government did not intend to have

[Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda; Sir William Vincent.]

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—" May I ask the Hon'ble Member to state his grounds for making that statement ?"

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda :—" That was in September. That was my reading of the Hon'ble Sir William Meyer's speech in Council, when he said that there would probably be no necessity for taxation this year. However, let that pass. In any case we cannot deny that there was extreme urgency in regard to that measure, but what has happened ? Here we find you have consulted Local Governments, the High Courts and Chief Courts, and why ? What has the High Court to do with a fiscal measure like this ? Is it possible that any matter arising out of the Bill will ever come before the High Court ? Here you have considered it necessary to consult High Courts and Chief Courts in regard to a fiscal measure, whereas in this other case, where we complain that there is no urgency, you are going to introduce a measure of a character which will create new rules of evidence, enact rules of procedure, which if anything reminds of the days of the good old Kazi, and you do not think it necessary to refer to the High Court or to the Chief Court, or take the opinion of a lawyer. Why is that, my Lord ? I submit there is no explanation of this. I respectfully invite Government to explain this matter. This question was put on the last occasion by many of us as to where was the urgency for this measure, why this hurry ? I listened with respectful attention to the lucid speech of my Hon'ble friend the Law Member. I have read the eloquent speech of the Hon'ble the Home Member, and I have read with attention the very strong speech of my friend the Hon'ble Sir Verney Lovett. But is there any explanation, my Lord, of this hurry ? Reference was made on the last occasion to the fact that the Defence of India Act was still in force. Why then is there any need for this hurry ; there could be an Ordinance. Then the Hon'ble the Law Member said this, my Lord :—

'What is the practical remedy proposed in this Council ? Well, we have two ; let me deal first with the no doubt practical suggestion in a way, of my friend, Mr. Surendranath Banerjee. He says ' You have got powers under the Defence of India Act which will last some time yet. Use them. After that pass an Ordinance to the same effect and use it for six months. Thirdly, you have got on the permanent Statute-book Regulation III of 1818. Use that.' Well, if I may take that in any sense as a mandate from Members of this Council, it is a mandate for repressive legislation of a far worse description than what we are now proposing.'

" Now I accept that statement of the Hon'ble the Law Member, but, my Lord, what is the bar to your Excellency passing an Ordinance on the same lines as this Bill ? Could you not do that ? What is the objection to an Ordinance passed by your Excellency which will take the place of the Bill here ? The Ordinance need not be of such a repressive character ; it can be on the same lines as the present Bill, so that argument does not hold. Why must we have this Bill passed by the vote of this Council ? Is there any difference between a Bill passed by the official block in this Council and an Ordinance passed by your Excellency ? You are going to pass the Bill in the teeth of the opposition of the whole of the Indian Members simply because you have an official majority. What is the difference between this and an Ordinance passed in an executive character ? A question was put by the Hon'ble Mr. Jinnah as to whether the votes of Indian Members counted for anything in the estimation of Government. To this the Hon'ble the Law Member again replied as follows :—

'If we are asked to surrender our own judgment, maturely and carefully come to on a very difficult question of policy, it is impossible for us to do so even in the unanimous opinion of Non-official Members who are not in the position of responsibility in which the Government is.'

" May I, with reference to this, make a request of the Government, my Lord. Will you remove the mandate and leave the official members free to vote just as they think right and not according to mandate, as you did last year in the case of the Income-tax Bill? Do it and I think it will make a great difference, and see what the result will be. I say, my Lord, there is absolutely no cause for hurry. It is just like a passenger who is travelling by the Punjab mail to Calcutta, sitting up and packing his hold-all at Allahabad because he would get down at Howrah. You could very well wait and see what happens.

" My Lord, there is another aspect of the matter. You are going to pass this Bill with a view to deal with the revolutionary movement in Bengal and other places. Well, have you had an inquiry as to the cause of that movement? That was not referred to the Rowlatt Committee. But we can find some answer; there is something in that Report although it was not in the terms of reference to that body. It is stated in that Report in one place that Barin Kumar Ghose came to Bengal from Baroda in 1902 to organise a revolutionary party and he failed and went back. But when he came back in 1907 after the partition of Bengal he was able to do it. What happened in the meantime in Bengal which made possible for Barin Kumar Ghose to do in 1907 what he could not do in 1902? It was the policy pursued by Lord Curzon which was a contributory cause. It was found that the Government did not pay the slightest heed to Indian public opinion, rejected it with contemptuous and absolute indifference. It was this, my Lord, which drove these young men to get out of hand. When they found that the united opinion of the nation counted for nothing, it was then that this political agitation, as the Hon'ble Mr. Banerjea has pointed out was driven under ground and this revolutionary movement was given a start. And the first false step by a tragic necessity gradually leads to something more dangerous. That has happened in Bengal and other places, my Lord. And are you quite sure that the procedure which you are now adopting will not help that movement instead of helping you to put it down. When it is found that you are riding roughshod over the unanimous vote of the Members of this Council, nominated and elected, who moreover have the whole country at their back, do you think that will not deepen the resentment of these young men? They are too young to judge correctly, and do you not think that that will make matters worse and instead of being able to keep matters in hand, you will simply drive it more underground. My Lord, I respectfully invite your Lordship's attention to these matters and join my Hon'ble friend in asking the Government to allow the Bill to be republished for the opinions of the High Court and other bodies. If afterwards you find there is need to have a law, proceed in the manner that the opinions seem to indicate, and I am sure the Government will get support from the Members of this Council if not from outside.

12-35 P.M.

" With these words I support the motion."

The Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru :—" My Lord, I do not wish to traverse the ground which has already been covered by my friends the Hon'ble Mr. Banerjea and the Hon'ble Mr. Shafi. My Lord, my Hon'ble friend Mr. Banerjea has referred to various grounds and to various reasons and asked your Lordship, in view of those reasons, to republish this Bill so as to obtain the opinions of the Local Governments, the High Courts and the general public. My Lord, it is not for me on this occasion to refer to the gathering storm outside the Council Chamber. Every one of us knows it and I sincerely hope and trust that our worst fears will not come to be realised. But I cannot shut my eyes to one important circumstance, and that is this. The Preamble of this Bill, even as it stands at the present moment, says :—

' Whereas it is expedient to make provision that the ordinary criminal law should be supplemented and emergency powers should be exercisable by the Government for the purpose of dealing with anarchical and revolutionary movements.'

" My Lord, it appears from that that the Government have persuaded themselves that the ordinary criminal law requires to be supplemented and that there are certain emergency powers which should be exercisable by Government for certain definite purposes. My Lord, as to whether the ordinary criminal law requires to be supplemented, as to whether the present legal machinery has broken down, as to whether it is impossible for Courts of law to deal with these offences effectively having regard to the present position of the law, I submit the best persons entitled to advise your Lordship in matters like these would be those very persons who have got to administer that justice from day to day. My Lord, I therefore see absolutely no reason why the Government of India should decline to take the opinions of the Judges of the High Courts in various parts of this country. They will either tell you in so many words that the present state of the law is unsatisfactory, that it is inadequate, that it does not enable Courts to deal with these offences in an effective manner, or they will tell you that the law, as you propose it to be passed, goes further than the necessity of the occasion requires. My Lord, supposing they are persuaded to take the same view, supposing they come to the same conclusion as the Government of India has come to, the position of the Government of India would, I venture to submit, be infinitely stronger when that opinion has been expressed by the High Courts. If, on the other hand, the High Courts think that the present legal machinery has not broken down, that the present law is effective, or that if it is ineffective it requires to be altered in certain directions then, my Lord, I submit there will be a very strong case for a reconsideration of the entire measure. Therefore, my Lord, I do not see at all any justification why the Government should be in such a hurry as to the passage of this measure now without taking the opinion of the High Courts.

“My Lord, the people of this country have during the last 50 or 60 years come to cherish great faith in the justice of the High Courts, and they believe that, while it may be impossible to come to correct conclusions when political passion is roused in assemblies which are professedly of a political character, in the serene atmosphere of the High Court it is quite different. Therefore, I will beg of your Lordship to consider whether it is not right, whether it is not expedient, whether it is not proper, that you should invite the opinions of those very learned Judges who have been administering justice and who are best able to tell you what is the present state of the law. My Lord, I am aware that in the Committee which you constituted there were three learned Judges. One of them was Mr. Justice Rowlatt, another was Sir Basil Scott of the Bombay High Court, and the third was Mr. Justice Coomarswamy Sastri of the Madras High Court. Now, my Lord, I have the highest possible respect for every one of those three learned Judges. I do not question their ability; I do not question their honesty of purpose; but at the same time I cannot forget that, so far as Mr. Justice Rowlatt is concerned, he has not had any Indian experience; he has not been administering justice in the Indian Courts. Therefore, his knowledge of the present state of the law and its relation to these crimes cannot be first hand. I am bound to attach the fullest possible weight to the opinions of Mr. Justice Coomarswamy Sastri and of Sir Basil Scott, but at the same time, my Lord, I cannot forget that the High Courts in India contain many more Judges than these two learned Judges, and that we are entitled to know especially what the Calcutta High Court which has had so much to do with cases of these crimes, thinks on the subject and what are the recommendations which it proposes to make with regard to any alteration of the law. Let us not be deprived of those benefits; let us not be deprived of the opportunity of finding out what dispassionate judicial opinion thinks about these matters.

“Then, my Lord, the amendment of my Hon'ble Colleague also suggests that these Bills should be referred to the Local Governments and to public bodies for criticism. So far as the Local Governments are concerned, my Lord, we do not know what they think with regard to the recommendations of the Rowlatt Committee or with regard to the specific clauses in this Bill which are intended to meet a situation such as is said to exist at the present moment. As regards public opinion, my Lord, give it time to think over this matter dispassionately. At a time like this, when political passion is raging high, you cannot expect that people can think about a measure like this dispassionately. There is bound to be strong political feeling in the country; already we are witnessing its existence. And, my Lord, I submit that if you only postpone this measure so as to give the public time to think over it dispassionately, it may be that you may find that the public may take a view somewhat less strong than they are taking now, though for my part I am free to confess that I doubt very much whether the public in this country will ever reconcile themselves to judicial discretion being supplanted by executive action.

"My Lord, on these grounds I strongly support the motion of my friend Mr. Banerjea as being in the highest degree expedient and as being also in the highest degree consistent with justice."

12-44 P.M.

The Hon'ble Maharaja Sir Manindra Chandra Nandi:—

"My Lord, it affords me great pleasure to support the amendment which my Hon'ble friend, Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjea, has just placed before you. I have tried my very best to understand and appreciate the point of view from which the Government are so anxious to rush the Bill, which is under our consideration at the present moment, through this Council, but, my Lord, I confess I have failed so far to discover the reason for this hurry. It is now recognised that the Defence of India Act will continue to be in operation till probably the end of this year, and, besides this Act, there is the old Bengal Regulation III of 1818, which invests the Government with almost plenary powers to deal with all sorts of anarchical and revolutionary crimes. If from now and the end of this year there should be in any part of India any unhappy re-appearance of such crimes, the Government will be able to deal with them with the existing weapons in its legislative armoury which I have already mentioned. My principal reason for supporting Mr. Banerjea is my conviction that, if the Select Committee's report is referred to Local Governments and High Courts and to public bodies for their considered and matured criticisms, the Bill will stand a chance of being very considerably improved. I have got one more additional reason to support Mr. Banerjea. If the present Bill is not passed by the Council this Session, it will not very materially exercise the public mind which will be certainly a very great advantage for both the Government and the people. We all realise how the Reform Bill, which, I hope, will not be long in coming, will badly stand in need of all the attention and consideration the country can give to it, unaffected by any distractions and distempers. As soon as the Reform Bill is passed, both the Government and the people will be in a better position to consider all the aspects of the present Bill from a new and perhaps a wider angle of vision. I would beg of the Government not to give any handle or opportunity to agitators of any kind to create any further discontent and mischief in the country. Time is a great healer, and if this Bill is put off for consideration till the next Session of the Council, the country will forget and forgive many things. My Lord, I, therefore, appeal to your Excellency to accept Mr. Banerjea's motion and give the country and this Council time to think over it again."

12-47 P.M.

The Hon'ble Mr. P. J. Fagan:—"My Lord, it must, I think, be admitted, that at first sight there is some reasonable ground for the amendment moved by the Hon'ble Member. On a cursory glance it might seem not altogether inappropriate that in dealing with a measure of this kind, even at this stage, when the Select Committee has completed the arduous labour involved in a minute examination of the provisions of the Bill, it should be allowed to follow that somewhat lengthy and devious course which is generally found to be appropriate for legislation in this country. But, my Lord, the circumstances and conditions surrounding the initiation and introduction of this measure are of a very special nature, and it seems to me that the Hon'ble Mover and other Hon'ble Members who have supported this amendment have scarcely accorded sufficient weight to the consideration of those circumstances. The Bill is the outcome of the deliberations, the prolonged and laborious deliberations and the considered recommendations of a peculiarly highly qualified Committee, of a Committee particularly rich in judicial talent. That Committee was appointed to investigate those widespread anarchical and revolutionary movements which have recently menaced public law and order, peace and safety, in this country. The Bill, my Lord, embodies the recommendations of that Committee, and in embodying them it scrupulously avoids anything in the direction of excess, any deviation from those recommendations being in the direction of defect. Far be it from me to speak except with the profoundest respect of those authorities to whom the Hon'ble Member would refer this Bill; but under the circumstances to which I have referred, it seems to me not unreasonable to ask what is to be gained by a prolonged and voluminous literary discussion of the kind which the Hon'ble Member appears to desire. Have we not here to-day in this Council the elite of the non-official political intelligence of India, fully prepared and fully competent to subject the provisions of the Bill to the most detailed examination? When I consider the lengthy vista of discussion which stretches down the ample limits of to-day's agenda, I cannot doubt that every hole and corner, every nook and cranny of this measure will in turn—it may be after the shades of night have fallen—be subjected to the searchlight of the keenest and the most acute criticism. I find it difficult to believe that when this much-to-be-pitied measure shall have happily emerged from the prolonged course of lingering inquisitorial torture with which it is threatened, anything will remain unthought or unexpressed which human intelligence can think or express about the merits and demerits of this measure. My Lord, under these conditions, I ask once more what is to be gained by procrastination and delay? The measure is, indeed, clearly a contentious one and, as such, demands the most careful examination and discussion at the hands of this Council. But the most appropriate occasion for that is obviously here and now, in this Session of the Imperial Legislative Council. The Bill involves principles of policy and government which are intimately bound up with the welfare of the State and with certain grave dangers to which that welfare has already been, and may again be, subjected. Surely it is beyond question that it is the duty of this Council to arrive at conclusions on those principles and on the details of the legislative action which they involve at the earliest possible opportunity.

“My Lord, I beg to oppose the motion.”

The Hon'ble Mr. G. S. Khaparde :—“My Lord, I have got 12-53 P.M. an amendment,

‘that the Bill be republished in the ‘Gazette of India’ in English and in all the Provincial Gazettes in English and in the principal vernaculars of each province,’ against my name which is very much the same as that moved by my Hon'ble friend, except that I ask that the Bill be republished in the ‘Gazette of India’ and in all the Provincial Gazettes in English and in the principal vernaculars of each province—an addition to which, I believe, my Hon'ble friend will not object, since his object it is to secure the fullest expression of public opinion. The reasons that have been given for this republication by the speakers that have gone before me, I stand by and I adopt. I wish to supplement their reasons with one or two others.

“It has been asked, and very pertinently asked, I believe, as to what is to be gained by a further discussion of this measure. It has been pointed that it will only increase agitation in the country, and it is very undesirable that this agitation should be prolonged or intensified. I do not deny that there is something in the argument; but I submit that this is exactly what we desire and which all law desires. Your Excellency knows that there is a presumption in law that everybody knows the law. As a matter of fact, I venture to think there are some points of law on which the most eminent practitioners are not agreed—I mean that jurists differ; and yet everybody is presumed to know the law and he is punished if he is found to have transgressed in any particular. Now this principle of law is recognised to be rather hard, and Judges have always said ‘Ignorance of the law is no excuse; I shall punish you, but I will be lenient with you’, and they let the offender off sometimes with a small fine, or in case of imprisonment, until the rising of the court, and so on. Now this principle of law did not matter so much in the ancient City States—like that of Rome. They were generally small States and all the citizens could gather together in one assembly or another, and the law was discussed and laid down, and the presumption arose that everybody who took part in the discussion of that law knew about it. And in those small City States probably they did know. But in modern times, when we live not in City States but in Empires, and large Empires over which the sun never sets, this presumption of everybody knowing the law is rather difficult to accept and difficult to understand. Along with the expansion of the States, expansion of the methods of publication has also gone on, and according as the law gets discussed, and more and more discussed, and even discussed in villages, so much the better for the law. Then everybody understands what the law is going to be and everybody knows, and any infraction of it can rightly and properly be punished. This by itself, I humbly submit, is a very good reason why the discussion should be prolonged.

[Mr. G. S. Khaparde.]

“I have got another reason for it. The most intelligent people probably at first sight see the right point and arrive at the right conclusion. People of slower intelligence, like myself, take some time to think over it, and I believe a smaller portion of mankind generally like to sleep over the discussions and they like to take time to make up their minds, and it is better that the law should be under discussion for some length of time, so that everybody has in his own way and in his own manner thought it out for himself. That is not all, my Lord. There is a further advantage in publishing the law, and it is to my mind a very estimable one. That advantage is this that when it gets discussed all over the towns and villages in all the rural places, I suppose these gentry against whom it is intended, they are somewhere about there I believe, they come to hear of this, and these revolutionary gentry or anarchical people they also possibly silently or perhaps actively whichever way it may be take part in these discussions, and the tendency of those discussions is that many of them would be converted to the right path by hearing reasons against it; that is to say this prolonged discussion is the formative stage of public opinion, and the longer it is carried on and the more vehemently it is carried on the better, because the persons concerned, the persons intended to be brought under the operation of this law will have an opportunity, and an ample opportunity, of considering the pros and cons and in all probability such of them as have got any spirit of citizenship in them and such of them as are open to argument and are wavering or as it has been said such of them as are very young, they will all get the benefit of these discussions and probably change their ways, so that by the preliminary discussion we gain the end of this particular law. In those circumstances I welcome this long discussion and prolonged discussion, and when a discussion becomes prolonged it generally decreases in intensity. Much has been said, nearly everything has been said, everything has been considered, and people do not want to listen to a person who goes on reiterating what has been said before; the ingenuity of man is after all limited, and he cannot have any further argument; then the matter becomes a little stale and nobody listens to him, and ultimately people come to some reasonable opinion about it. When a new law of this kind is enacted, it is proper that the matter should be allowed to grow even stale for the matter of that, so that public feeling comes to a certain point, and public judgment arrives at a particular conclusion, and then the legislature can very easily embody that conclusion in the Bill or Act, as the case may be. There is a further thing in this particular law which I wish I had mentioned earlier; but even now it is worth mentioning. It is that this law, as I have been saying, really speaking introduces no new principle; it introduces limitations to an old principle. The old principle is that nobody's liberty or property is to be taken away without the sentence of a Court. That is the law in England and everywhere else. But the contention of the framers of this Bill is that in the particular circumstances of India, those circumstances are so unhappy and so bad, that we are compelled to infringe upon this liberty, and to circumscribe, so to say, its application. That may be. I have disputed that myself both at Simla and here, and I maintain that no occasion has arisen for it; but conceding for the sake of argument that there is some occasion for circumscribing the wide application of this principle, I humbly submit that is all the more reason why we should discuss that principle and why we should discuss every limitation that is sought to be put upon it. That was one of the reasons which I wish I had said earlier. I will not say that I am right; but in the earlier stage of this discussion it is not the principle of the Bill at all, it is the circumscribing circumstances that have been introduced into the Bill that are to be discussed, and in this Bill, therefore no question of principle arises. However, be that as it may, I humbly submit still further that one of the reasons for the publication of this Bill and the details of it is that all these details which go and which are intended to circumscribe the principle universally acknowledged, those details should be considered as minutely as possible and even considered more than it is necessary, so that it might become a part of the life of the people, and when they become a part of the life the people they unconsciously get into the law and the law gets the support not only of the intellect of the nation but also of the heart of the nation, of the life of the nation, and the law really becomes easy to administer. These are my reasons for saying that this Bill should be published, not only in all the Provincial Gazettes, but also in all the principal vernacular languages, so that everybody may read or as in India many people do not read, everybody can get it read to him; he may hear about it; discussions may go on in his native language and in his native village, and in that way he becomes acquainted with all the circumstances. Also incidentally they would know why Government is framing this Bill and they would think about it. I do not say that they would all come to the same conclusions. If those conclusions are favourable to the Government all the better. If they are not favourable to Government still better, because then they will come here and they will find expression through some of us here and Government will be in a position to discuss them and arrive at what I call a reasonable conclusion. So from all points of view, whichever way you look at it, it appears to me that further discussion and a little time given to the people to form their opinions would be very wise indeed in these particular circumstances.

"I have spoken practically on my own amendment which is nearly the same as that of my Hon'ble friend, Mr. Surendranath Banerjea, except that I wish to introduce the principal vernacular languages into it, to which I am sure he does not object or is not likely to object. I have spoken on this so that a vote may be taken on my amendment also without a further speech from me."

The Hon'ble Rai Sita Nath Ray Bahadur :—"My Lord, I 1.3 P.M. beg to join my humble prayer to the united prayer of the whole body of non-official Indian Members of this Council requesting your Excellency to postpone the consideration of this Bill till September next. I strongly appeal to your Excellency, entreat and implore your Excellency with folded hands to make this small concession to public opinion. If your Lordship does it, it will be considered not a sign of weakness but a mark of magnanimity,—a mark of grace. I beg to repeat that you lose nothing, absolutely nothing, by postponing its consideration. Then why this insistence on a course of hurry which will give rise to fierce agitation in the country? I am a loyal subject of the Government, always ready to help in my own humble way any cause which goes to maintain law, order and good government. If I apprehended that a little delay would go to subvert law, order and peace, I would have been the last person to press for it. I beg to repeat here a trite Sanskrit saying—'Asuvasya kalaharanam'—that is, in a matter which will lead to disaster, delay is preferable. With these few words I beg to support the amendment of my Hon'ble friend, Mr. Banerjea."

The Hon'ble Rai Bahadur B. D. Shukul :—"My Lord, I rise 1.5 P.M. to accord my wholehearted support to the motion moved by my Hon'ble friend, Mr. Banerjea. My Lord, you are aware of the bitter opposition to which the Bill has given rise in this country. It was expected that the Government would see their way to drop the Bill altogether. It was further expected that if that was not possible, Government would see their way to modify the Bill in such a manner as would be acceptable to this Council and to the country at large. But that was not to be. We counted without our host, and the result is, that the Bill as it has emerged out of the Select Committee still retains many of its objectionable features. There is no doubt that there have been material changes made in the Bill, yet there is a great dissatisfaction felt about the Bill, both inside and outside the Council. In a measure of vital importance like this, a measure which involves questions of life and death, and on which opinion is so sharply divided, it is in the fitness of things that the Bill as amended should be republished, so that the opinions of the public bodies and of High Courts as also of Local Governments should be obtained. My Hon'ble friend from the Punjab, Mr. Egan, seems to think that republication would only encourage 'literary discussion.' With all respect to my friend I do not agree with him. It will not only help literary discussion, but it will invite expert opinion of such bodies as High Courts. My Lord, do the opinions of such bodies as the High Courts of Calcutta and Bombay count for nothing? I am sure your Lordship will not agree. I am quite sure the opinions we shall receive from such responsible bodies will help us greatly, and who knows the Bill after that may be so modified as to become acceptable to the country at large. Why should there be such a hurry when the whole thing is in the melting pot? The Bill affects the whole country and the whole of the Indian population, the majority of whom do not know English. It is therefore very necessary, as suggested by the Hon'ble Mr. Khaparde that the Bill should be published in the principal languages of the provinces; it is also fitting that before any further action is taken the rural areas, from which I have the honour to come, should know what we are doing. They have a right to express their opinions on the subject and have their say. I do not think that your Lordship will be justified in legislating in regard to matters which so greatly affect them behind their backs. With these few words, my Lord, I support the motion of the Hon'ble Mr. Banerjea."

[At this stage the Council adjourned for Lunch.]

2-15 P.M.

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—"My Lord, after the decision of your Excellency to sit at 6 o'clock and thereafter, I do not think it is worth while taking up the time of this Council in supporting or opposing the motion of my Hon'ble friend, Mr. Surendranath. That decision, if it means anything at all, clearly and certainly means that so far as the official block in this Council is concerned they have made up their minds that the motion is going to be rejected, and the Council will begin considering the amendments at 6 o'clock. However, so far as my position on this amendment is concerned, I want to make it perfectly clear. I am one of those who believe that the only way to improve this Bill is to entirely drop it, and I do not think any amount of opinions received from the High Courts or the Local Governments or any political associations will make this Council a bit wiser. I am, however, prepared—the Council will be surprised to learn—to support the motion of my Hon'ble friend, Mr. Surendranath, and my reasons are only two. The first is, that it is human nature to see that the evil day is postponed, and I should certainly like to see that that day is postponed to September of this year or to any other further day. From that point of view I welcome the motion of my Hon'ble friend, Mr. Surendranath. My second reason is, that there is always a slip between the cup and the lip, and if this matter is now postponed it may be that time may bring wisdom, and the Government might see the unwisdom of passing this measure at any time. With these few remarks I cordially support the motion of my Hon'ble friend, Mr. Surendranath Banerjea."

[12TH MARCH, 1919.] [Mr. T. Emerson ; His Excellency the President.]

2-19 P.M.

The Hon'ble Mr. T. Emerson :—" My Lord, I rise to speak on this measure in the hope that the experiences of a Magistrate who has had much to do with the working of the rules under the Defence of India Act in Bengal may be of assistance to Hon'ble Members from other provinces in making up their minds as to the necessity for the Bill. It is not necessary for me to take up the time of the Council by enumerating the causes that led to the formation of a revolutionary party in Bengal, but it may help to bring the conditions of that province in 1915 and 1916 more vividly before the minds of Hon'ble Members, if I describe some typical cases which had to be dealt with by me as District Officer of Tipperah during those two years.

"The first case I propose to describe has already been mentioned in the speech of the Hon'ble Sir Verney Lovett on the occasion of the introduction of the present Bill. Early in 1915 Babu Sarat Kumar Bose, the Headmaster of the Comilla Zilla School, brought me a revolutionary leaflet which had been delivered in an envelope to a master in the school by two school boys. The boys.

His Excellency the President :—"The Hon'ble Member will speak a little louder. It is very difficult to follow him, he will speak a little louder and slower."

The Hon'ble Mr. T. Emerson :—"The boys admitted the delivery of the envelope and said it had been given to them by a young man who said it contained a letter of invitation to some social function. An inquiry into the affair was held and no young man answering to the description given by the boys could be found. As it would have been unfair to assume that the explanation given by the boys was untrue they were re-instated in their places in the school from which they had been suspended pending the inquiry. The circumstances of the case, however, could not be kept secret, and the Headmaster's zeal being found inconvenient to the revolutionaries, he was shot dead in the public street at Comilla while it was still daylight on the 3rd March 1915 under such circumstances of brutality that one other man was killed and three injured by bullets. The occasion selected for the murder was the occasion of the matriculation examination; it was a time when schoolboys had come up for the examination from all over the district. The murder took place so close to my house that I was on the spot within half an hour of its commission. As president of the Zilla School I had had frequent occasions to consult with Babu Sarat Kumar Bose for whose character I had a high esteem. The Council will realise my feelings when he was struck down almost at my door and I was unable to defend him or punish his assassins.

"In another case which occurred in May 1916, the executive of the revolutionary conspiracy decided that a wealthy man of my district should be compelled by threats of death to himself and his family to pay a sum of money to the friends of the revolutionary cause. The notice to send the money was served through the registered post in a printed form, the blanks of which were filled up in manuscript, and it may interest the Council, if I read the English translation of the notice as produced in the subsequent criminal case. This is a translation of the threatening letter in this Extortion case. 'You are hereby appointed (a paper-torn and in other copies later found with arms and ammunition on house search the word is 'contributor') in the Indian War. To maintain your position, respectability, property and for the preservation of your life and specially as a security for the faithful discharge of our work (by you) in the new free State, you must deposit Rs. 7,000 by the month of Bhadra in the National Bank, otherwise fine and forfeiture of your life will inevitably follow. If you play the traitor, you shall be killed with your whole family.

President.'

There is a postscript to the effect that the date of depositing the balance of Rs. 5,000 shall be communicated later on. The notice was followed up by a visit of agents of the revolutionaries armed with revolvers and after much negotiation it was arranged that the victim should bring the money to a place not far from the Comilla Railway station after nightfall and that two men should meet him on bicycles, receive the money, and escape by a train leaving at the time. The police obtained news of the intended extortion and intercepted the two men as they were escaping on bicycles. One of the men was arrested: the other jumped off his bicycle, ran off in the dark, and opened fire on the police. After a lively interchange of shots in the dark, he escaped: but the arrested man was brought straight to me with the revolver found on him. The man from whom the money had been extorted was also present at the inquiry which was held and his demeanour has left an indelible impression on my mind of the extent to which the revolutionaries succeed in terrorising their victims. I have learned that he died not long after the trial and it has been suggested that his death was hastened by the terrors that he has passed through, acting on a feeble constitution

His Excellency the President:—"I do not wish to stand in the way of the Hon'ble Member, but I would draw his attention to the fact that the amendment we are discussing is to the following effect, 'that the Select Committee's report, together with the Bill and connected papers, be referred to local Governments, High Courts and public bodies for criticisms.' Members, I hope, will confine themselves to discussing the amendment which is before the Council."

The Hon'ble Mr. T. Emerson:—"I was attempting your Excellency to prove how very urgent the matter is."

His Excellency the President:—"If the Hon'ble Member is leading up to that point, I am quite satisfied."

The Hon'ble Mr. T. Emerson:—"That is my object, your Excellency. By making these remarks, I was intending to describe the state that Bengal was in before we started to apply the Defence of India rules, and I had only one other example to give. After that I meant to describe the way in which they were dealt with under the Defence of India rules, and then to show the present state of affairs so as to show that this is indeed an urgent matter.

"The third crime that I was going to describe in order to show the necessity for the measures which subsequently had to be taken was the Laliteshar Dacoity, which took place in my district on the 11th September 1916. A number of young men armed with revolvers were committing a dacoity when they were obstructed by the villagers. In trying to escape with the loot, they shot dead five of the villagers, wounded five others and lost one of their own number killed. The dacoit who was killed was subsequently identified as a man who had been interned under the Defence of India rules and had absconded from domicile. In this case Government paid the debts of the villagers who had been killed and pensioned their families, and it was my privilege as Collector of the District to distribute these and other rewards locally. The unanimity of the whole country side in condemning the acts of the anarchists was evinced by the voices and presence of crowds who came to show their sympathy with the widows and children of the murdered men.

"This was the state of affairs in 1915 and 1916. I have described three typical cases, one each of murder, extortion and dacoity out of many that occurred, and I think I have said enough for Hon'ble Members to realize how difficult the situation was with which we had to deal.

"Cases of conspiracy and other criminal cases had been instituted, but although some persons had been punished, no impression had been made on revolutionary crime, while the murder or terrorization of witnesses and informers were making such prosecutions more difficult and less desirable. During the progress of these cases, however, a clearer knowledge was obtained of the character of the revolutionary movement, the members of which were found roughly to consist of three classes. The first class included the leaders—men so steeped in the doctrines of revolution as to be entirely irreconcilable—and those of their disciples who were so infected by the poison of their teaching as to be incurable.

“The second class consisted of those whose minds were poisoned but not so badly, that their cure was beyond hope. Besides these two classes there was a third class, mostly of students, and schoolboys who had a vague notion that by becoming revolutionaries they were joining a high and patriotic movement. The system of training young men in revolution and anarchy is described by one of themselves in a statement quoted in paragraph 104 of the Rowlatt Report to which I refer the Council. The majority of the members of the movement had been induced to join by working on their religious and patriotic emotions with insidious falsehoods, and it was this foundation of falsehood which made it impossible that the movement could retain good men once they knew its true meaning.

“Many such men, with the intention of putting an end to a movement which they believed would do no good either to their country or their religion, gave at great danger to themselves full information of the revolutionary conspiracy and of those who were engaged in it.

“By collating these statements and verifying them in every possible way, a knowledge of the exact state of affairs and of the names and degrees of guilt of the conspirators was obtained which could not have been obtained with similar accuracy in any other way, and we were placed in a position to act with certainty and effect when, in 1916, action was taken under the Rules made under the Defence of India Act. The first class of revolutionaries, those who in the interest of peace and of the suppression of the revolutionary movement could not be set at liberty—were proceeded against under the Regulation or interned in jail. A second class, it was hoped, separation from evil influences and an opportunity for meditation would cure—they were interned at a distance from their homes or in their own homes according to the degree in which they were implicated. The largest number of all belonged to the third class who were merely warned in the presence of their parents and guardians. I have warned many men and boys in the last class personally and solemnly in the presence of their parents and guardians, and am glad to say that in very few cases has it been necessary to proceed against them after the warning. On the other hand, in many cases the warning, I believe, led to the re-establishment of parental influence which had been weakened or lost by association with anarchists.

“As for the treatment of those who were confined in jail and detained in the mofussil, it is considerate and thoughtful. Those in jail under Regulation III are not associated with ordinary prisoners. They associate with one another and they play badminton, chess, pasha and other games and continue their studies, as far as is possible, by reading and writing. There are non-official visitors especially for them and the Magistrate himself visits them . . .

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—“I rise to a point of order, your Excellency. The question is not the necessity for the Bill but the urgency of the measure. That is the only question before the Council, and your Excellency ruled that Members should confine themselves to the consideration of the amendment only.”

His Excellency the President :—“I think the Hon'ble Member has been straying from the amendment during the last two or three seconds. I hope the Hon'ble Member will confine himself to the amendment.”

The Hon'ble Mr. T. Emerson :—“The revolutionary movement is not yet dead. There are still in custody or in detention men whose release would mean the breaking out again of the old trouble, and there is recruiting going on still of young men who are to be ready when the Defence of India Rules are no longer in force. If, however, the Council shows by the passing of this measure into law that its face is set against anarchy and revolution, I am convinced that the movement will quickly die a natural death. This is the reason for the urgency of the measure. If the measure is now postponed, if it is not passed into law, if the Hon'ble Member's amendment is accepted, and the Council shows that there is the least weakening in dealing with this anarchical and revolutionary crime, then I think that it will act as an encouragement to these people who are still working in order to carry on the movement."

2-34 P.M.

The Hon'ble Sir Fazulbhoy Currimbhoy:—"I am not at all convinced by the arguments which were brought forward by my friend the Hon'ble Mr. Emerson. The Defence of India Act is going to remain in force till the peace is signed and six months after. My friend, the Hon'ble Mr. Banerjea, when he moved this amendment, clearly pointed out that peace will be signed much later than September. So, if this Bill is postponed until September and the views of the people of the country, of the High Court and other bodies are obtained, nothing will be lost. I think the Hon'ble Mr. Emerson is under the misapprehension that the Defence of India Act is going to be cancelled and that this Bill is going to be brought into force immediately.

"I have no other arguments to put forward, because, after the eloquent speeches of the Hon'ble Mr. Banerjea and many of the previous speakers, I do not wish to take up the time of the Council. I sincerely support the amendment moved by my friend the Hon'ble Mr. Banerjea."

2-35 P.M.

The Hon'ble Sardar Sunder Singh Majithia:—"My Lord, unfortunately for myself, I was not present on the first occasion when this Bill was being discussed. The measure is a very important one. It brings into being a machinery for disposing of certain crimes in a speedy way and in a somewhat different method from what is in the present law of the country. I have since read the debate with very great interest, and sometimes have been swayed one way and sometimes other by the eloquent speeches of the Hon'ble the Law Member on the one side and the non-official element of this Council who belong to the legal profession on the other. To a layman like myself the reading has been a very interesting study. But, my Lord, though I am willing to do all that lies in my power to meet the requirements of an urgent situation, but I am not convinced of the hurry with which the measure is proposed to be dealt with, infringing as it does with some of the vested rights of citizens of the Empire, I am aware that the provisions of the Bill are meant for those who have anarchical tendencies, but you have, my Lord, to consider the vast majority of innocent people and you cannot help considering that it is the subordinate police who will have to take the first step in the matter. We know that many a good measure has been made impossible by the underlings who have to deal with the public at large. I am quite prepared to give due praise to the police where they deserve, but this does not take away from the fact that the whole of the police force is free from any taint. So, I fear that in the working of this measure the police will get unlimited scope for their activities, and there is a very great danger of the innocent suffering with the wicked who could have no sympathy from the law-abiding citizens of the Empire. We have besides to consider that the measure introduces certain innovations into the law of the country which have been so well put forward by my legal non-official colleagues of this Council.

"My province has had some kind attentions from the votaries of this reprehensible cult, but not finding a suitable ground they had to import a certain section from outside the Punjab, who for some valid grievances were easily misled into actions which were against their well-known traditions. But, my Lord, the section of the law-abiding community in my province did not give them any support and the country as a whole has helped the authorities to put down the activities of the revolutionaries and the behaviour of the people is a proof positive of what the co-operation of the people can do in this matter.

"My friend, the Hon'ble Mr. Fagan, has said what good would it serve if the Bill were circulated for public opinion when the elite of the country are represented in this Council? But may I ask my Hon'ble friend if he would give consideration and due weight to the opinions of the elite of the people as represented and expressed in this Council? He again said what is to be gained by procrastination and delay? Well, the old proverb says, 'When you have no one to consult, consult the wall'. Delay causes no harm and we may elicit opinion which may be useful. So I would strongly urge the acceptance of the amendment proposed by my Hon'ble friend Mr. Banerjea."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—My Lord, I should be inclined to vote against the amendment suggested by my Hon'ble friend, Mr. Banerjea, on one condition. I do not know that I would be right in doing so even on that condition, but it is a consideration worthwhile stating. The Hon'ble Mr. Fagan has told us that every one of these amendments that is put on the agenda will be discussed, and may be discussed in the open Council, and that the remarkable ingenuity that is displayed in the framing of these amendments shows the ability and the grasp of the subject of the Hon'ble the non-official Members and, consequently, that the measure cannot suffer by the non-postponement of the consideration of this question. 2-40 P.M.

"We are deeply thankful to the Hon'ble Mr. Fagan for the compliment he has paid the non-official Members of this Council. If the Government would allow the official Members of this Council to vote as they please, according to their consciences, according to their convictions, then I for one would be prepared to ask that the Council should reject or may reject this proposition of the Hon'ble Mr. Banerjea. In that case each question, each proposition, each amendment would be discussed on its merits by the whole Council, and there might be a chance of modification in the principal provisions of this measure. But our past experience, my Lord, the experience of most of us who have been connected with the Councils, confirms the painful fact that if non-official Members can influence the Government at all, it is only in the Select Committee stage or before a Bill is presented to the Council, and that it is nearly impossible to convince the Government once they have made up their minds in the Select Committee to follow a certain procedure to change their line of action by any arguments that may be advanced in the Council. I quite appreciate that here and there in minor points there may be a little give and take; but in substantial questions which matter, I think, it is the experience of all that there is absolutely no hope or chance of amendment. It is therefore in the hope that the Government themselves, having regard to the constitution of the Council, might reconsider the provisions of the Bill—it may be all the provisions of the Bill—or at any rate those to which the strongest exception has been taken. It is in the hope that the Government will reconsider the Bill in the light of any remarks or suggestions that may come from Local Governments, from official bodies or the Hon'ble Judges of the High Courts, that most of us are here struggling to induce the Government to accept this amendment. It is not an impossible thing to conceive that the Government, if they should be so advised by their Local Governments, by their own officials and their own Judges and by any such bodies as they might have confidence in might change their views with regard to the scope and character of the more important provisions of this Bill. It is for that that we ask for an adjournment: not that a few months would be of such considerable use as that we should waste the time of the Council in pressing this amendment. It is really all the same whether we pass the Bill now or in September. It is because we think there may be some chance of the Government reconsidering their decision that we press this amendment. So much has been said already as to nothing being lost if a little time is given, that I cannot add usefully to those remarks. It has been said that a Committee has gone into the whole question and that the Government are only carrying out the provisions recommended by that Committee. We quite appreciate that. It is just possible that after listening to the advice of their own officials the Government will come to practically the same conclusion. There is a possibility of that. But I submit, my Lord, that every opportunity should be given when such drastic provisions are going to be placed on the Statute-book ; every opportunity should be given to the officers of the Government and to His Majesty's Judges to say as to whether the machinery at their disposal has failed ; if it has failed, in what respects it has failed, and how it should be modified or rectified. His Excellency has ruled that the amendments suggested to the Select Committee's report by the Hon'ble Pandit Malaviya, Mr. Patel and Mr. Khaparde, are out of order, and I am bound implicitly to obey that ruling ; but having regard to the one exception that was made previously, it is just possible that the Government might communicate those amendments also to the Local Governments and others and to the public at large with a view to eliciting any suggestions that might be made with reference to the suggestions of those Hon'ble Members. I only throw it out as a possibility, not that I have much hope of its being accepted. But I still submit that it would strengthen the hold of the Government on the public if a little concession of that character were made without standing too strictly by technical rules.

"With these few words, my Lord, I hope the Hon'ble Mr. Banerjea's amendment will be accepted by the Council."

2-48 P.M.

The Hon'ble Mr. W. A. Ironside:—"My Lord, the opportunities that I have of taking further part in public life are, I feel, drawing swiftly to an end, and I may tell some of my Hon'ble colleagues that I shall depart from political life disappointed and very discouraged. When I first took a hand in the work of this Council I came here full of sympathy, full of desire to do my part as a friend of the country, ready to be convinced by any opposition to my own views. I have listened to-day to a great deal of eloquence, but I cannot help feeling that all of my Hon'ble friends have failed to use a single argument which has carried with it to me any conviction, and until I am convinced I cannot support an amendment such as has been proposed by the Hon'ble Mr. Banerjea. I do not think that any one has questioned the position that has been taken up by the Members of Government in regard to this measure. I have gone into it very closely. I have listened to all the speeches for and against, and I feel that Government have acted throughout with care, with sincerity and with generosity. One of the special pleadings that have been put forward is that more generosity is still needed. Now, as far as I have seen in my dealings with this country, up to a point generosity and justice is necessary ; but beyond that point generosity and justice are a suggestion of weakness, which is taken hold of and only carries weight and strength to the movement against a generous Government. Now, my friend the Hon'ble Mr. Banerjea has told us that this Bill affects but a very small and unimportant section of the community. I agree, and consequently I, for the life of me, cannot understand this extraordinary concern for a small and unimportant section of the community, whilst the greater and saner section of the community, which the Hon'ble Mr. Banerjea represents, should not be considered by the provisions of this Bill. That is one of the reasons why I for one cannot understand the logic of some of his proposals.

"It has been suggested that this Bill should be referred to the High Courts. Now I may be wrong, I may not know anything of politics, but I have always been under the impression that the High Courts read the law as it emanates from this Council.

"Is this Council not to form the law, or make the laws of the land, or is the High Court to do so? If the High Court is to tell us what we are to do, then what is the use of this Council? I cannot see why we shall be any better off next September after we have heard the views of the High Court than we are to-day, if we are to be the body to make the laws of the country.

[12TH MARCH, 1919.] [Mr. W. A. Ironside; Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjea; Mr. M. A. Jinnah.]

We have been told that time is a pacifier. Well, it is sometimes. I do not know that it is so in all cases. From my experience of this country I have not any great faith in that idea of Mr. Banerjea.

"The danger to the reform scheme has been brought forward with reference to this Bill. We are told that the Government have brought forward this Bill in order to endanger the reform scheme. It has been suggested

The Hon'ble Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjea :—" Not by me."

The Hon'ble Mr. W. A. Ironside :—" I did not say by the Hon'ble Member. It has been suggested that this Bill is a hidden wicked provision of Government to endanger the future of the reform scheme. Now, my Lord, with all the faults of the Government of India, I refuse to believe that there is one man in the service of the Government of India who would so endanger the good name of Britain, who would so endanger the name of the service to which he belongs, to think of such an idea as that. Personally I think that if this Bill had gone through, it would have gone a long way to assist the reform scheme and that the danger now lies if the people of Great Britain and the opponents of the reform scheme get to hear of this agitation in India and of the opposition in this Council on the premises put forward by my Hon'ble friend and colleague.

"Coming to the question of public opinion, I have just come back from Calcutta, and I had an opportunity there of discussing this proposal with several Indian friends, friends for whom I have got the greatest respect, whom I am prepared to meet on equal terms anywhere, and although I was very much impressed prior to my visit to Calcutta with the eloquence of some of the gentlemen in this Council, I was appealed to, to oppose the suggestion, and to help this Bill to go through for the sake of the people of Bengal, and for the sake of that saner community, the saner proportion of the community for which my friend, Mr. Banerjea, speaks. My Lord, the question is one of conviction. Are we in favour of anarchy or are we not? If we are convinced that this Bill deals with anarchy and wickedness, and anarchy and wickedness only, then there can be no opposition to the Bill which has any convincing proof behind it."

• The Hon'ble Mr. M. A. Jinnah :—" My Lord, I had no intention of taking part in the debate on this motion, because I understood clearly from what fell from your Lordship that the Government had made up their minds not to accept the motion of my Hon'ble friend, Mr. Banerjea. But the only hope that I have still left is that I may be able to convince Mr Ironside, if he is, as he says, open to conviction; although I recognise that it is a very difficult task having regard to the manner and tone of his speech. However, I will make an effort. My Lord, Mr. Ironside says first of all 'Why do you want to postpone this thing?' Now, I will try and explain to him the object of the postponement. To begin with, this Bill is brought into this Council by an executive Government, an executive Government that has got no mandate from the people at all. The executive Government means the Governor General in Council. They have decided to undertake this legislation upon the recommendations of the Rowlatt Committee. That executive Government consists of a small number, and I have my doubts, my Lord, as to at least some members of that executive Government as to what they think of this piece of legislation. I also have, my Lord, my serious doubts and I cannot believe that men of the type of the Hon'ble the Law Member, men like Sir C. Sankaran Nair could possibly have in their heart of hearts really liked this measure or given their sanction. Even, my Lord, as regards Sir George Barnes, a member of the bar, I say I have my doubts. What do you then find? You find that the Executive Council have determined to bring these Bills before us. This Executive Council with an official block behind, who are not given any discretion in this Council to vote according to their own conscience or take part in this debate according to their own judgments :

2-57 P.M.

[Mr. M. A. Jinnah.]

The official majority are under order to vote for the Bill. We were told by the Hon'ble the Law Member that the Government of India (which means the Executive) had considered this matter, and that they were not going to surrender their judgment. Now, my Lord, it is for that very reason and because this Council, this Legislative Assembly is so peculiarly constituted that in all its wisdom it has invariably obtained previously even in trumpery matters the opinions of Local Governments, High Courts and all public bodies, otherwise there is no check or means of stopping the executive in its determination. I am not here to doubt the sincerity of the Government. I do not for a moment doubt that their conviction is based on grounds which appeal to them. That is not the point. Nobody has suggested that the Government have acted with sinister motives; nobody says that the Government is not convinced. But you forget that the Government, as it is constituted, has no check on it of any kind whatsoever. You find that the executive, or the Governor General in Council, have decided that these Bills must go through. You find in this Legislature an official majority at their back who are under orders to vote for the Bill and you find every non-official Member opposed to it. Now, how is the issue to be decided? Are we wrong or are you wrong? That is the question. Have we gone mad? There is not a single non-official Member in favour of the Bill. My Lord, this is a serious situation. I appeal to the Hon'ble Mr. Ironside, are we wrong under these circumstances to say 'please stay your hand.' Let us get outside this Chamber. In this Council-chamber the atmosphere is surcharged with two elements, you are determined to carry the Bills through; we, on the other hand, are determined to oppose the Bills to the last. Now, my Lord, I appeal to any reasonable man, is the situation not serious? Should it not be solved? We say get the opinions of Local Governments, get the opinions of High Court Judges, get the opinions of public bodies. If Mr. Ironside is right that Indian gentlemen with whom he is prepared to stand on equal terms anywhere told him that they want this Bill in Bengal for the safety of the saner section, well, let us have their opinions. Surely, if responsible people in Bengal have come to that conclusion, would not your hands be strengthened. I see the Hon'ble the Law Member shakes his head. My Lord, I have so much respect for him that I can never say anything against him, that is not possible, but I will say this, my Lord, that he is still a mere advocate and when once he advocates a cause he is nothing but an advocate. My Lord, I am surprised at his attitude, but this is rather going away from the merits of the motion, but I am really surprised that the Hon'ble Mr. Ironside, an Englishman, I believe I am right, but he may be a Scotchman, anyhow he is a Britisher, should say that there is a small section, admittedly a bad lot, a wicked lot, that this Bill is intended to deal with them. And why is this bigger section, this saner section so much excited over it? All I can say to Mr. Ironside is, please peruse your own history, your people in England have fought for this since the time of King John and they have shed their blood in order to maintain this principle that no man's liberty is to be taken away without a trial. It is not the wicked we want to protect, it is not them that we want to see escape being brought to trial; it is the innocent we want to save. Can you imagine what the passing of these laws means. No Englishman could stand here and allow if it was his own country a law of this character to be passed and say 'what does it matter, because there is a small gang of men who are committing political crimes, I shall accept these laws.' What did you do in England? I am astonished that Mr. Ironside does not know his own history. Even under the Defence of the Realm Act in England at the time of this great war, no British subject could be interned for more than six days without a trial unless he was of hostile origin or associations. We gave you power here to intern a British subject in this country without a trial under the Defence of India Act. What do you find in England? I would ask Mr. Ironside to read a judgment if he wants to do so, delivered in 1917 by Lord Shaw.

"A German, but naturalized British subject, was interned for 18 months; members of the English Bar and some of the Judges subscribed to his defence fund in order that his case should be taken to the House of

[Mr. M. A. Jinnah.]

Lords. I have been brought up in your own school, Englishmen have been my masters and I think that this measure before the Council involves an upheaval of constitutional rights. If you say 'we are the Executive, we have a majority, and we are determined to carry this Bill through, no matter what you say, no matter what you think'; if you say that you are determined I have nothing more to say but that the consequences will be most unfortunate. What are you going to gain by this? I fail to understand. But we have come to a crisis an impasse, and I ask what is going to be lost by postponing this Bill till September. I entirely associate myself with the remarks of the Hon'ble Mr. Banerjee. In regard to the reform proposals my expectations are not those of other people, they are not extreme expectations, but I believe that they will go a great way to clear the atmosphere. My Lord, it was said that it will make agitation worse. There again I am not going to be a prophet. But how is that possible? Why do you say that agitation will be worse than what it is at the present moment? I say the agitation is at its height at the present moment. I have to-day received a telegram from the non-official members of the Bombay Legislative Council. The Hon'ble the Law Member says 'Oh, agitation will be what the politicians choose to make it.' I can tell the Hon'ble the Law Member that if he had any experience of the public life of my country I am sure he would never have said that. 'Agitation will be what the politicians choose to make it!' All I can say is that this is a great mistake. The non-official members of Bombay have sent me the following telegram and it is signed by Mr. Gokhal Das Parekh, the mildest of the mild men, and on this point I am sure the Hon'ble Sir Dinshaw Wacha will bear me out. This is the telegram: 'The Association of non-official members of the Bombay Legislative Council unanimously resolved at their meeting to-day to request you to express their emphatic protest against the Rowlatt Bills; please read this telegram to the Council.' By your meeting this very simple request your position is not in the least prejudiced. If Government in deference to public opinion stay their hands at least for a short time, what will be lost?

"Then, my Lord, another argument which was advanced by my friend Mr. Ironside, and I believe that is an argument which appeals also to some of the officials; it is that if you make any concession to public opinion, it will at once be taken as a sign of weakness. Such a monstrous argument was never advanced before in this Council. Does Mr. Ironside think, my Lord, that we here in the Council and a large body of men outside this Council are so stupid as to think that because the Government have in the clearest possible case met public opinion and made a concession, that the public would construe it as nothing but weakness on the part of Government? In that case, the safest rule, my Lord, is that, the moment Government once come to a decision, however wrong it may be, however flagrantly wrong it may be, the Government must stick to it, because you have come to a decision. The public may oppose but it is your duty to say 'we are not going to be called weak. No matter how hopelessly wrong we may be'. Is that weakness? I say it is not weakness. It is injustice, but to do the other it is strength. You are not in a position to gag the mouth of every individual when there are 300 and odd millions of inhabitants in this country; there may be a man here and there, there may be a little bit of a rag that may talk in this fashion that the Government had to give in, the Government had to bend and all that. But, my Lord, would you hear such a sentiment from any responsible man? We know perfectly well, every Indian who has got any sense in him knows perfectly well, that you are all-powerful, you have got the power, you have got the strength, you have got the force behind you, and you can put into force any law you like. Any man who has the slightest intelligence understands that. Well, then what is the good of bringing this argument? My Lord, it is an argument which is put forward with a view to really stiffen the back of the Government. Those, my Lord, who want the Government to persist in the wrong course always like to bring forward this argument in order to stiffen the back of the Government, because they do not want the Government to come to right conclusions. That is all that I can say about this line of argument.

[Mr. M. A. Jinnah ; Sir William Vincent.]

[12TH MARCH, 1919.]

" Well, my Lord, coming to the third point raised by the Hon'ble Member from the Punjab, the Hon'ble Mr. Fagan, he said ' Oh, well, we have got here all the talents, all the abilities of both officials and non-officials, although officials here are not allowed to exercise their judgment nor are they allowed to vote as they like, not even Mr. Fagan is allowed to vote as he likes, but he says we are all here, we have got the orders to vote and we have got to vote. Well, if that is going to be the principle, my Lord, and the Hon'ble Mr. Ironside also asked who is going to legislate, we or the High Court Judges, and observed that we are the Government, and we have to legislate. Mr. Fagan says ' we have got all the talents here, what more do you want. ' But, my Lord, may I ask a simple question that if that is so, why is it that any Bill is ever allowed to be published at all ; why is ever any Bill sent for opinions to Local Governments, to the High Courts and to the public bodies, why is it ever done, I repeat ? We are to legislate, we have got all the talents here, what more do we want. No, my Lord, the object of this is that we want outside opinion, opinions from different parts of the country, opinions from men who are both in close touch with the actual administration of the country and also of the public life of the country. That is the object, and it is a very wise and a very salutary practice ; we must not arrogate to ourselves that we alone here have the concentrated wisdom centered in Delhi or in this hall. Therefore, my Lord, I submit with the utmost respect that the Rowlatt Committee's recommendations are ex parte. The decision of the Executive Government has been arrived at without due consideration of the matter. I do not doubt for a single moment the convictions of the Government or at least of some of its members ; I do not doubt the sincerity of the Government. But I say, my Lord, and I do beg of the Government to take note of this : Do you doubt our sincerity of opposition ? Do you doubt our convictions ? Do you think that we are opposing for the sake of opposing ? Do you think that we are putting these difficulties in your way unnecessarily ? Do you think that you have the welfare of my country at your heart and that I have not ? Do you think that I want revolutions while you do not want them ? Do you think that I want disorder and you do not want it ? Is there a man in this room amongst us whom you can point out and say that there is one man here who would like to see the welfare of my country being sacrificed ? But, my Lord, why is this position taken up by us ? And I do ask you, and I do appeal to you, to pause, my Lord, I had got up merely for the sake of convincing Mr. Ironside, and I do ask Mr. Ironside, were he an Indian standing in my position and if he understood this measure, and its effects, if he had been brought up in the traditions of Great Britain, as I am, would he not feel what I am feeling and say what I am saying ? I am sure he would."

3-19 P.M.

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—" My Lord, of the many amendments that have been proposed with which I shall have to deal in this debate, this is perhaps the most important, and it derives, if I may say so, additional weight from the character of the Hon'ble the mover and from the support that it has received in this Council. It is to my mind a matter of great regret—and I speak here with all sincerity—that the Government are unable to accept it. I regret this the more because of the support that this amendment has received from a number of Members who are often able to co-operate with Government. There are other Members whose co-operation and support I have less reason to hope for.

" My Lord, the question of the urgency of this legislation, and that is the only question that is before us, was debated at great length when the Bill was introduced and referred to Select Committee ; substantially the same questions which have been agitated to-day were then discussed very fully, and I should like to know what has happened since then which can lead this Council to reverse the decision then arrived at, namely, that the consideration of the Bill should not be deferred. Can it be said that it has been materially changed in Select Committee or made more drastic ? The Hon'ble Mr. Chanda put forward in this connection two arguments. In the first place, he said that even if the modifications are in the direction of making the Bill less drastic, still this was a material change, and for that reason it is desirable that it should be referred for public opinion. If the Hon'ble Member had been one of those who thought that we had gone too far in the way of mitigating the rigours of the Bill, I could have understood him, or if Mr. Ironside or some other Member had said you have made a mistake in making this Bill applicable for three years only; if you publish it in the country you will find the public wish it made a permanent measure, I could have appreciated the objection; but I do not understand that to be the point of view which Mr. Chanda takes up at all. The only other reason which he gave for suggesting republication was that the Bill had been made more drastic and was an amendment of clause 20. I think it will be time enough for me to deal with that matter when the specific amendment relating to the clause comes up for discussion; but no Member of this Council can, I think, suggest that, taking it all in all, this Bill has not been made less drastic than before, and it was in this direction that the Government consistently throughout the Select Committee attempted to meet Hon'ble Members. They were, as I said at first, anxious to make any modifications they could in it without rendering the Bill ineffective for the purpose for which it was framed. I submit, therefore, that there are no reasons which exist now for republishing this Bill which did not exist at the date of first hearing.

" I have listened very carefully to the various arguments that have been put forward for republication and I tried to collect them as best I could. The first suggestion was that public feeling was much agitated over the Bill, and that there was a prospect of passive resistance. My Lord, I do not wish to deal with this question of passive resistance at present. I can only say that I am very glad to see that many Members of this Council have rejected the idea and done their best to discourage it. I will add that it must be a matter of regret to all of us that a man of Mr. Ghandi's character should have lent his support to it, but I do not think that any Member of this Council will suggest for a moment that the attitude of the Government of India in regard to legislation, which is of urgency and importance, should be affected by a threat of this character. Mr. Banerjea then took a somewhat different line. He said if you postpone this Bill till September, the agitation will diminish and become less forcible. My Lord, I wish I could believe that that would be so. Dr. Sapru did not indeed support this opinion, and if I may say so, I think his is the more correct view. The more Government yields in this matter, the greater force would the agitation obtain. I would not of course make that a reason for refusing to postpone the Bill if I thought the postponement were otherwise desirable, but the suggestion that the agitation will decrease if the consideration of the Bill is deferred is an argument that I could not accept. Another argument addressed to Council was—'you have consented to republish the other Bill and so you ought reasonably to take the same course with this one.' I think I have got the argument correctly. The answer is very simple and very short. The other Bill was of an entirely different character. It was a permanent piece of legislation and not an Emergency Act. When the question of postponing further consideration of that Bill was under discussion, the argument was all the other way. It was then said that that Bill differed entirely in character from the Emergency Powers Bill, and therefore you can have no objection to republishing it. When we accept that view and republish the smaller Bill we are told: 'oh, you have republished one Bill you ought, therefore, to republish the other,' although the two Bills stand on an entirely different footing. There is no force in this argument.

" Another argument suggested is that the passing of this Bill and the failure to republish it may prejudice reforms. I think I need say nothing more on that subject: it has so frequently been explained on the Government side that we do not believe that the action which we are taking can in any way prejudice reform. We believe, on the other hand, that failure to deal with this revolutionary movement will be far more likely to impair the chances of political progress in this country than anything else. We may be wrong, we may be right, but that is the view which many of us hold.

[Sir William Vincent.] [12TH MARCH, 1919.]

"The next suggestion that I heard was, that as the revolutionary movement is now dead, you really need take no action. My Lord, on the last date when this Bill was debated I did my best to explain to the Council what the actual position was. For the time being this evil has been checked temporarily under the powers vested in Government under the Defence of India Act, but we know that the conspiracies exist and that the leaders are only waiting to renew their activities, and that they are only checked by the fact that they know of the powers exercisable under the Defence of India Act. If those powers were removed, I venture to prophesy that there would be a violent recrudescence of the movement, and such disheartening and discouragement of our officers that results of a disastrous character to the peace and good government of the country would certainly ensue. The movement, my Lord, is not dead. I wish it were. If that were the case the Government would not have introduced this legislation, nor would the measure have that urgent character which it now possesses. At the last meeting I read out an extract from Sir Henry Wheeler's speech in the Bengal Council on this subject, and I also read out other extracts to which I do not wish to refer again, which illustrated what the intentions of these anarchists are.

"The only other point to which I need refer—and it is a matter of great importance—is that it is said we have failed to consult Local Governments or ascertain what public opinion in regard to these measures are. My Lord, we have really had this question under examination for a very long time. We had been discussing it for years before the war began, and if it had not been that the accident of the war necessitated the passing of the Defence of India Act, we should have had to undertake special legislation to deal with this kind of crime very much earlier. It is not accurate to suggest that we have not consulted Local Governments and others on this subject fully and very comprehensively. As a matter of fact the recommendations of the Rowlatt Committee's Report were circulated to Local Governments, and we have either had written opinions from them or consulted leading officers sent up by the Local Governments to discuss the question with us. The decision we have made has not been reached by the wisdom of the Government of India alone, but after very careful discussion with numerous authorities. As for public bodies, may I draw the attention of the Council to the fact that the Rowlatt Report has now been published in India for about eight months and every public body, indeed many individuals, have had ample opportunities of saying anything that they liked about it. Nor has there been any lack of criticism by public bodies on the Bills now before the Council.

"I have received a considerable number of such criticisms myself. It cannot therefore be said that the necessity for this legislation and the details of it have not been examined and ventilated very thoroughly. It is true that we have not got the opinions of the High Courts, but, on the other hand, we have the opinions of a number of judicial officers and the Committee, which was originally constituted to consider this question and of whose recommendations this Bill is the result, consisted entirely, save for one officer, of either professional lawyers or judicial officers. This is not a Bill hatched in the innermost recesses of the Secretariat. It is not a Bill concocted by some bureaucratic Civilian; it is a Bill that emanates from the recommendations of a Committee composed of three Judges, one Indian lawyer and, I think, one executive officer. It cannot be said, therefore, that judicial opinion on this measure has not been taken. Further, if we did refer a Bill of this character—certainly the preventive Parts II, III and IV—to the various High Courts including the Calcutta High Court for opinion, judging by past experience, the chances are that the reply would be that the Judges were not concerned with executive acts of this character and therefore that they would not give us any opinion. The Hon'ble Member* shakes his head, but I have had some experience of these matters.

"I have now attempted to deal with the arguments which have been raised in favour of republication, but I want very shortly, even at the risk of repeating some of the arguments which I put forward in the opening

* The Hon'ble Mr. Banerjee.

debate, to explain why the Government of India think it necessary to push on with this legislation. They do not do so with a light heart. They appreciate the difficulties of the position; they appreciate also the undesirability of moving in opposition to the views of many whose support they always seek to secure. The position is this, that peace may be declared at any moment. The Hon'ble Member would postpone the date to some time in June or July; we think that the date may be earlier. After that, the Government wishes to be in a position in which it will not have to use for the preservation of the public peace measures intended for the war more than is strictly necessary. They have already been accused unjustly, as they think—possibly Hon'ble Members have a different opinion—of using unfairly emergency measures intended for the war, for purposes for which those laws were not enacted. The force of that accusation would be redoubled if, after the conclusion of peace, the powers conferred upon Government by the Defence of India Rules were used unnecessarily. Moreover, the Government cannot risk the possibility of a gap between the date on which the Defence of India Act ceases to be in force and the new legislation comes into operation. We were told, I think by Mr. Chanda to-day, that we could meet the difficulty by an Ordinance. The Hon'ble Member—if I may pause for a minute here—went on to say that Acts of this Legislative Council were much of the same nature as Ordinances, in that the executive always carried its own way. May I point out that that is scarcely fair or generous to us. The difference is this. An Ordinance is made by an act of His Excellency without consulting public opinion at all; legislation is passed in this Council after hearing what everybody has to say, and I do think that Hon'ble Members of this Council ought to give us at least the credit of having materially modified this Bill to meet their wishes and having gone as far as we thought possible to meet them in this matter. To suggest, therefore, that legislation in this Council is of the same nature as an Ordinance is, I think, as I said before, a little ungenerous to the Government.

“To return to the question of providing what is required by an Ordinance, I would ask the Council to consider very dispassionately whether they would have supported the Government if we had asked His Excellency to make an Ordinance of this kind. We should have been told that the Rowlatt Committee's Report had been out a year, that no attempt had been made to legislate in the Council although every opportunity had occurred for doing so, that Hon'ble Members had not been allowed to examine the proposed legislation and that their opinion had been deliberately flouted. Lastly, it would have been added that the Government had abused the power created for an emergency after the emergency had passed. The suggestion is that we might extend the Defence of India Act by an Ordinance. My Lord, when that Act was passed, Sir Reginald Craddock gave a distinct undertaking that it would only be in force during the war, and if we had asked His Excellency to extend the period by an Ordinance, I think we might also have been very well accused of a breach of faith. I do not think seriously that any one can say that the Ordinance method of legislation could have been adopted in the circumstances.

“I want, however, to use this argument rather for a different purpose. Hon'ble Members say ‘Use the Defence of India Act; prolong its life by an Ordinance; do anything you like; take these powers; use them, but do not ask us to support you.’ My Lord, is not that an admission that there is a necessity for legislation? Is it not an admission that the dangers to be apprehended from this revolutionary movement are very real, and that preventive measures are urgently necessary? Further than that, does not it really constitute an admission that the very kind of measures which we are now asking this Council to support us in taking are a reasonable and effective means of preventing this evil? . . .

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda:—“What I said was that, assuming that there was any need for this legislation, do it by Ordinance. You can do that.”

[Sir William Vincent ; Mr. M. A. Jinnah ; Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya.] [12TH MARCH, 1919.]

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—"The Hon'ble Member, I think, has forgotten that he is not the only Member of Council. This suggestion has been made both on the last debate and now by several Hon'ble Members—at least that is my recollection"

The Hon'ble Mr. M. A. Jinnah :—"I rise to a point of order. If the Hon'ble Member wishes to refer to a particular Member, I think his name ought to be mentioned. I do not think it is fair to make a general statement like this, and when one member gets up and contradicts it, then it is said it was somebody else."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—"I remember the names of the Hon'ble Members perfectly well, and I think the Hon'ble Member knows them too. If he denies that the statement was made that the Defence of India Act should be prolonged by Ordinance, I shall be glad to name the Member who recommended it, and my suggestion is that any one who puts forward the proposal that we should prolong the life of the Defence of India Act, that we should enact preventive legislation by Ordinance is really asking us to do by an executive act what he reprobates as a legislative measure. I maintain myself that the course taken by the Government in this matter is more open and more honest. We say very definitely that we require these powers urgently to enable us to discharge our responsibilities to His Majesty for the preservation of the public peace. We believe that the maintenance of order is essential in the interests of political progress which we fear might be irretrievably endangered by any outbreak of revolutionary crime, and we come to this Council and we ask them openly for their support in this matter. We are strongly of opinion that no useful purpose would be served by republishing the Bill at this stage. Indeed, we think that any such republication would merely promote in the minds of the public an element of uncertainty as to the intentions of Government in a matter upon which their views are perfectly clear. It could therefore only encourage and promote further agitation.

"We have made every endeavour that we can to meet reasonable opinion; we have explained the reason for this legislation; we have restricted its scope to the narrowest limits; and we must now proceed with it and cannot allow ourselves to be prevented from doing so by any threats of agitation.

"My Lord, I have very nearly done. I only wish to add that we are not pressing this measure through Council during the present Session out of any sense of opposition or out of any desire to flout the Members of this Council. We honestly believe that the measure is urgently needed, and that, unless it is passed some parts of this country will be plunged into the disorder which prevailed only a very few years ago; and it is for that reason that I regret—and as I said at the opening of my speech I use the word in all sincerity—I greatly regret that I must oppose this motion for republication."

3-43 P.M.

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya :—"My Lord, the Hon'ble the Home Member asked what has happened since the time the Bill was first taken up in this Council to modify the decision then arrived at not to postpone the Bill? I will try to answer that question. What has happened, my Lord, is this. When the Bill was first taken up and discussed here, the motion was that it should be referred to a Select Committee. It was referred to a Select Committee. The Select Committee met and considered the Bill and the Members of the Committee expressed their opinions regarding it. Now, my Lord, we have the opinions of some of the Members of the Select Committee before the Council; the opinions of all the Members of the Select Committee are not before the Council. This is one thing that has happened.

"The second thing is that this Council has found now, even from the report of the Select Committee as it is published, that the Indian Members who have signed the report differed from the majority of the Committee on very important and essential points. They urged certain amendments of a radical character. Those amendments have not been accepted by the Select Committee. When the Bill was referred to the Select Committee there was a hope—such a hope was held out by more than one official Member—that there would be an opportunity in the Select Committee to discuss the important points which had been raised. That opportunity was availed of. It has been found to be fruitless, so far as the main amendments are concerned; and it has become all the more necessary that this important and extraordinary Bill, with the differences of opinion on cardinal points which the Report of the Select Committee even as it is before the Council indicates, should be circulated for opinion to High Court Judges and to other competent persons and bodies in the country.

[Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya; Sir George Lowndes.]

“ My Lord, speaking in support of the amendment moved by the Hon’ble Mr. Banerjea, my friend the Hon’ble Mr. Shafi, drew attention to one important provision in the Rules for the conduct of Legislative Business, namely, that on being introduced into the Council a Bill should be published in the Gazette and circulated for eliciting opinion thereon. As he reminded the Council, in this instance that very wise and sound procedure had not been followed. The Bill was published under rule 23. But such publication was not meant to dispense with the necessity of circulating a Bill for opinion except perhaps in the case of a Bill of a non-contentious character or a Bill of no great importance. It could not have been meant that a Bill of the importance of the one which is now before the Council published under rule 23 of the Rules of Legislative Business should not be circulated for eliciting opinion. But as that was not done, the fact furnishes a very strong reason for the view that the Bill as it has emerged from the Select Committee should be circulated for opinion. My Lord, in this connection it is important to remember what the provisions of law are. Rule 19 says that when a Bill is introduced, one of the motions which the Member in charge may make shall be that the Bill be circulated for opinion. Rule 25 says after the publication of a Bill in the Gazette of India, the Select Committee to which the Bill may have been referred shall make a report thereon; such report shall be made not sooner than three months from the date of the first publication in the Gazette of India unless the Council orders the report to be made sooner. Then it is provided in rule 26 that the Secretary shall cause every report to be printed and shall send a copy to each Member, and shall cause the Report, with the amended Bill, to be published in the Gazette of India. Rule 27 further provides that the Report of the Select Committee shall be presented to the Council and shall be taken into consideration; but any Member may object to its being so taken into consideration when he has not been furnished for a week with a copy of the Report. I draw attention to these rules to show that the Legislature, in enacting these rules in its calmest moments, thought it fit to provide that a Bill which has been referred to a Select Committee should, with the Report of the Committee, be published so that the people may have ample opportunity of knowing how the Bill has been amended and how it stands. I may draw attention to similar provisions in the rules of business of the Provincial Legislative Councils. For instance, in the Punjab Rules of business it is clearly laid down that, when a Bill is referred to a Select Committee, the Committee shall examine the Bill clause by clause, and if they, or a majority of their number, decide to recommend any modification in the Bill, the Bill shall be revised so as to bring it into conformity with such recommendation, and the Committee, or a majority of their number, shall make a report on the Bill. A further provision lays down that any member of a Select Committee who desires to record a note of dissent from any such report must forward the same without delay to the Secretary, and the Secretary shall thereupon annex it to the Report. . . .

The Hon’ble Sir George Lowndes :—“ My Lord, I submit that the Hon’ble Member is not in order: we have nothing to do here with the rules of other Councils.”

[The President; Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya.]

[12TH MARCH, 1919.]

His Excellency the President:—"I presume the Hon'ble Member is going to build up his case on these arguments; but he must confine his remarks within certain limits."

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya:—"My object in referring to these rules of business is to support my proposition that ample provision exists for the circulation of a Bill which has been referred to a Select Committee and of the report of that Committee. That is my point and I am not going beyond that. I refer to the rules of business of Provincial Councils to show how consistently this provision has been laid down. The next rule to which I was going to refer, my Lord, was that which says that every Report of a Select Committee shall be printed and a copy thereof shall be

His Excellency the President:—"I really think the Hon'ble Member is travelling outside the permission I gave him. I am quite willing that he should use so much of the rules of business as is necessary to show that what we are doing on this occasion is not in accordance with those rules; but he must not be reading out every section of the provincial rules of business."

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya:—"Well, my Lord, I will not read out the sections. I was only drawing attention to the fact, in the language of the rules instead of in my own faulty language, that the Report and the minutes of dissent should be circulated and published in the Gazette, as a provision to secure that full publicity shall be given to the Bill as it has been amended by the Select Committee. A similar rule is to be found in the Bengal Legislative Council Manual, and also in the Bombay, Madras, and Bihar and Orissa Legislative Council Manuals, namely, that when a Bill has been referred to a Select Committee, the Report, together with the notes of dissent, shall be published and placed before the Members and also published in the Gazette. Now, my Lord, this has not been done here, and I submit that the point raised by my friend the Hon'ble Mr. Shafi receives very strong support from that circumstance, and the proposal of the Hon'ble Mr. Banerjea that the Bill and connected papers be circulated for information stands therefore on a stronger footing from what it might have stood upon if the particular course to which exception has been taken had not been adopted.

"Now, my Lord, this much so far as following the rules of business is concerned. The next thing which has happened since the Bill was introduced when the decision was taken not to postpone it, to justify its postponement now is a matter to which the Hon'ble the Home Member has himself referred and to which many other Members have referred, namely, the opposition which has been shown to the Bill since that date, and it is a tremendous opposition. The Hon'ble Member referred to the passive resistance movement which has been started against the Bill, and said that it was regrettable that a man of the character of Mr. Gandhi should have lent his support to such a movement. I will say this, my Lord, that when a man of the saintly character of Mr. Gandhi, who is the best friend that the Government have in this country, than whom there is no better friend of the Government among Indians, has felt it his duty to vow passive resistance in relation to the Bill, that is a matter for the Government to ponder over, to take into the most serious consideration. My Lord, the opposition to the Bills has been spreading far and wide in the country and it has been deepening. That is a new circumstance, and it is the duty of the Government to show reasonable deference to public opinion, and in deference to that opinion to proceed at least at a slower speed than this Government is proceeding. My Lord, the Hon'ble the Home Member said that when the Government had determined that the proposed emergency legislation was necessary,

[12TH MARCH, 1919.] [Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya; Mr. W. A. Ironside; The President.]

the opposition raised against the Bill would not affect the attitude of the Government. Well, as my friend, Mr. Jinnah, has pointed out, situated as it is, the Government has it in its power to disregard public opposition. But it is not wise to do so; it is not wise of the Government to disregard the unanimous opposition of every reasonable man among Indians who has had the courage or the opportunity to speak on the Bill. If there be any Indians who have spoken in private to the Hon'ble Mr. Ironside in support of the Bill, we cannot take note of their opinions until they come out in the open to express their opinions

The Hon'ble Mr. W. A. Ironside :—" They dare not."

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya :—" I am sorry for them. Their opinions are not worth having if they have not the courage to stand up and express themselves publicly in a matter which affects the life and liberty of our people.

" Now, my Lord, that is the second circumstance to which I invite attention. A third fact is that those are questions of expediency, whether the Government consider it wise to defer to public opinion, whether the Government would not gain morally,—which even in politics counts for much more than brute force,—whether the Government will not gain morally if it had the support of the non-official Members here or at any rate the majority of them. That is a matter which the Government may yet ponder over. But, my Lord, there is a more important reason why Government should reconsider its position. I have referred already to the fact that many of the amendments we suggested in the Select Committee and on several of which the Indian Members were unanimous or nearly unanimous, were not accepted by the official majority which sat on the Committee. This Council did me the honour of inviting me to be a Member of that Committee. I accepted the invitation, though I was entirely opposed to the Bill. I accepted it in the hope that there would be opportunity in the calmer atmosphere of the Select Committee to persuade my official friends to take what we regarded to be the correct view of the situation. According to your Excellency's ruling, which with great respect, I wish I could discuss, but which I am precluded from discussing, but which if your Excellency will only allow me to say so with great respect, I consider to be wrong and ultra vires

His Excellency the President :—" I think the Hon'ble Member had better not."

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya :—" Very well, I am not going to discuss it; I only wanted to submit with great respect. I will not go into the question

His Excellency the President :—" The Hon'ble Member must leave that subject. He knows perfectly well that he is attempting to get a discussion on the subject which under the rules he is not allowed to do."

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya :—" My Lord, I will only say this much that, as in view of your Excellency's ruling, what I said in my note is not before this Council, that fact compels me to place my views expressed therein at some length before this Council. As I said a little while ago I do not want indirectly to try to do what the rules will not permit me to do. If I want to do anything, I do it in a straightforward way. But as the rules will not permit, I am content to bring before this Council my reasons which I urged in the Select Committee for the abandonment or radical modification of these Bills. Now, my Lord, as I pointed out there the amendments which have been made in the Select Committee, though mostly useful, have not touched the main scheme of the Bill. Its policy and principles, its character and scope remain unaltered. If even the most important of the amendments urged by us Indian Members had been accepted, they would have made the Bill less dangerous, and therefore less unacceptable. But the majority of my colleagues in the Committee did not think it fit to do so, and though there are numerous notices of amendments, the attitude of the Hon'ble the Home Member which determines the attitude of the entire official majority in this Council, has shown that there is little hope of our having these matters considered favourably.

[Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya; The President.]

" Now, my Lord, I want to draw the attention of the Council to the fact that this measure, as it has emerged from the Select Committee, not being altered in any important respect, is more drastic than the most drastic legislation which was ever passed by Parliament. The Prevention of Crimes Act, 1882, was described as one of the most stringent measures ever introduced into Parliament. It was described by Mr. Dillon as the strongest measure of coercion that was ever passed for Ireland. The present Bill is far more stringent than that Act. Under that Act persons committed for trial for certain offences were to be tried by a Special Commission Court consisting of three Judges of the Supreme Court of Judicature in Ireland. But the Act laid down that a person. . . .

His Excellency the President :—" I want the Hon'ble Member to remember that he is speaking to an amendment, and if he will show how he is going to build up his argument on what he is reading, I will see if it really has any bearing on the amendment before the Council ; otherwise I shall have to rule him out of order. "

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya :—" I shall bow to your ruling, my Lord, but may I submit a point for your consideration before you give your final ruling ?"

His Excellency the President :—" Certainly."

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya :—" My point is this : the question now before the Council is whether the consideration of this Bill shall be postponed according to Mr. Banerjee's motion or not. If this motion is carried, it will not be necessary at present to deal with the many other amendments which stand on the paper after his amendment. It is therefore very important from our point of view that we should give every reason why this motion of Mr. Banerjee's should be carried. I wish to point out to the Council how very drastic the Bill is as it stands, and to ask the Council to consider whether the Bill being so drastic as it is, should not be circulated for opinion, so that Government and the Council may be in possession of those opinions before it comes to deal with its provisions. That is the whole object with which I am speaking now. Now, my Lord, that Act of Ireland, the Prevention of Crimes Act of 1882 laid down that the person tried by a Special Commission Court

His Excellency the President :—" Now really that is going much too far. You can deal with this Bill and say how much too far it goes. I really cannot have all the old Acts from other countries brought up before this Council."

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya :—" If your Lordship will kindly let me finish the sentence, you will see how pertinent it is to the subject."

His Excellency the President :—" I have signified my views for the Hon'ble Member, and I hope that he will pay attention to them."

[12TH MARCH, 1919.] [*Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya ; The President ;
Mr. Srinivasa Sastri ; Mr. W. A. Ironside.*]

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya :—"The point is this that this Bill does provide that if three Judges are of one opinion, sentence may be passed. I am going to point out that the provision in this Bill is more drastic than the provision in that other Act,....."

His Excellency the President :—"The Hon'ble Member will have an opportunity of discussing that particular amendment when the particular section comes up. If this Bill is postponed for six months, well then, the Hon'ble Member will be able to discuss it next September. It is quite unnecessary to discuss the point at the present moment."

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya :—"Then, my Lord, I shall say no more."

The Hon'ble Mr. Srinivasa Sastri :—"My Lord, I did not intend at first to take part in the debate on this amendment, but certain remarks which fell from the lips of my Hon'ble Friend Mr. Ironside compel me to do so. A certain amount of solemn interest attaches to his remarks as he apprised us that this might be almost his swan song. I was rather surprised to notice that he put a certain amount of tragic note in the observations he made"

4-2 P.M.

The Hon'ble Mr. W. A. Ironside :—"Unintentionally."

The Hon'ble Mr. Srinivasa Sastri :—"A great poet has said in words that are suggestive. 'A little thing may harm a wounded man.' I suspect that the Hon'ble Mr. Ironside has received some sharp stab from a dear and unsuspected quarter, which has made him sensitive to such trifles as his Indian friends have been saying. The Hon'ble Mr. Ironside in the remarks he made has told us something about the Indian Civil Service and something about the Government of India to both of whom he has given a handsome testimonial. I hope they will cherish it. Well of the Indian Civil Service he said that no one will oppose these reforms, I am bringing the discussion to the point of urgency, your Excellency. The anxiety that they feel that the Bill should pass this Session is not a token that they wish to hinder the reforms. He said that the accusation had been brought against them by somebody or other. The Hon'ble Mr. Ironside cannot have read the recent newspapers very carefully. The attitude of the Indian Civil Service has elicited much unfavourable comment, and it was found necessary to reassure them by your Excellency in the opening speech of this Session that the reforms would not affect their status or their privileges in an adverse way. I have no desire to advert at any great length to these side observations that the Hon'ble Mr. Ironside made. But as he wished to give a setting to the remarks of his Indian friends, it appears to me to be necessary to break upon that setting a little. Then he went on to say that in this country a general concession does not pay and that it is regarded as weakness, and that if the Government of India concedes a little, it is only asked to concede a little more. I am not quite sure that the Hon'ble Mr. Ironside applies that observation to Indian public opinion. Some amount of contrast has been drawn between European opinion in this Chamber and Indian opinion. It appears to me that with far greater justice European lies under the charge than Indian opinion. May I recall a few instances?"

The Hon'ble Mr. W. A. Ironside :—"I do not think I differentiated between Indian and European opinion on this question."

The Hon'ble Mr. Srinavasa Sastri :—"I will not attribute the contrast to Mr. Ironside. European and Indian opinion were contrasted at this meeting. I am only concerned to point out to Mr. Ironside that if the Government of India yielded to Indian opinion in this matter, they would not be weakening their position. Recent experience endorses the hope that I am

[Mr. Srinivasa Sastri.]

endeavouring to express. When Indentured emigration was stopped some little time ago, I take it in deference to Indian public opinion, was it considered a sign of weakness by Indian newspapers and publicists going about and proclaiming in the streets that 'the Government of India is tottering, let us bang it still more?' Or did they regard it as an exhibition of moral strength that the Government of India made the concession which had been long due before it was finally granted? Then again with regard to these Reform proposals when they came upon the scene, did they not do a great deal to calm the situation, to quiet down exacerbation and racial antipathies that were then the dominant feature of Indian public life? I do assure the Hon'ble Mr. Ironside and others who think like him that if the Government postpones this measure in deference to our wishes, that will only be strengthening their hold upon Indian public opinion. Mr. Ironside was right but not in the way he meant. The Government of India would in that case only be showing weakness in the eyes of its European critics. That is the point. Generosity pays with us, it does not pay with some sections of the other community. Then, my lord, Mr. Ironside said in an almost touching way 'after all you do want this measure to deal with a small and unimportant section. Why don't you hand them over to us to be dealt with as seems meet and proper? You the bigger, the honester, the more important section, you need have nothing to do with all this.' Unfortunately my Hon'ble friend Mr. Jinnah in reply to this seemed to acknowledge the force of the remark, only seemed for, knowing his views, I feel sure that he would never have willingly agreed to that. He said 'certainly, we don't mean by our opposition to defend the wicked, we mean by our opposition to defend the innocent'. So far as that went it was correct, but it leaves the real position in my opinion untouched. Your Excellency, the real position is this. The men are wicked, the men have been found to be fanatically disposed, they have set their hand to conspiracies. How are these people to be dealt with? The men whom the Government of India suspect to have been connected with fanatical and revolutionary movements, how are they to be dealt with? Not summarily, not without bringing them to a Court of law; they are not to be deprived by a stroke of their liberty of freedom but in certain well acknowledged ways. That is why the Government of India is anxious to secure the co-operation of the Council in passing a measure of this kind. It is a measure of regrettable severity, it is a coercion Bill, and therefore it requires to be defended on extraordinary grounds. It is a matter that cannot be lightly disposed of. You cannot say 'these are wicked people, it does not matter how they are dealt with.' They must be dealt with in accordance with the principles approved by conscience of civilized society. I am very glad that the Hon'ble Mr. Jinnah gratefully acknowledged the advice the Hon'ble Mr. Ironside gave him by giving him some advice in return. The advice that he gave him was to read the history of his own country. I will not go so far to the bottom, but I will ask the Hon'ble Mr. Ironside to study the love of liberty, that is a great trait of his countrymen. I can assure him that the principal feature of the love of liberty is not love of your own, it is not love of liberty for your own community, so long as you are sure that you will not come under the severe operation of these laws. English poets, publicists and statesmen have glowed with pride at the thought that their spirit is love of liberty for others. The lover of the liberty of other communities, the love, especially, of the liberty of those over whom you enjoy political power. It is that love that we want embodied and exhibited in the conduct of this measure, and the first test to which we are putting it is to ask that this measure be postponed.

"Now I am not one of those who think that an Ordinance passed under the authority of the Viceroy is necessarily a superior instrument of legislation to an Act passed by this Legislature. I would never suggest it in ordinary circumstances. It is very well indeed that the Government of India come to us and ask that we should sanction this measure. There is, however, one advantage in the case of an Ordinance, one advantage in the case of the Defence of India Act. They carry on their face the character of being emergent; they carry on the face the character of being very very temporary. The measure that was originally brought before us did not bear this character and roused, therefore, a great amount of alarm, and it was chiefly with reference to that measure that most of us suggested that an Ordinance would perhaps have been a preferable way of approaching this question. But I do not regret that your Excellency's Government has brought forward this measure and placed it before this Council now. I am very glad indeed that your Excellency's Government have shown a desire to consult Indian opinion, to take the advice of their constitutional advisers on this most important question. I would ask your Excellency's Government to come to us in the true, earnest spirit, seeking our co-operation and advice and resolved to profit by it, and to act upon it to the extent that you consider desirable. Now you come to us, and we tell you 'please postpone this measure for a Session.' I do not say on the merits I can argue this amendment with very great effect, consultation with High Court Judges, the taking of opinion from Local Governments—for the moment I dispose of it. They are mere secondary reasons, I would not lay stress on them. There is no doubt I look forward to this postponement with hope for the reason that it would give time to all of us to think a little better of this matter. The Government for their part would gain time, and that is what the Hon'ble Mr. Fagan forgot when he asked, 'what do we stand to gain by postponing?' We gain time, we gain time for sober thought, we can gain time for finding out the best settlement of these issues. The Government for their part might perhaps think 'very well, this measure need not after all, be brought in.' Six months' time might have given them the assurance, especially after the Reforms Bill had been introduced into Parliament, that perhaps it might be just as well to go on for another six months without any special measure on the Statute-book. On the other hand, the people too, reading the various proposals made in Parliament, the people too might think 'very well, now that this Bill has been put up and stands a good chance of being passed, we are getting a good deal of political power, we need not suspect the motives of Government to the same extent that we are now disposed to do.' It is just possible. Is that not a thing gained? I think it is a great moral gain to all sides concerned in this matter, and I should esteem it a great blessing if the Government could be induced, even at this last moment, to regard this amendment not on its own merit I put it aside, but on the political ground of expediency.

"Now, your Excellency, in reply to the objection that perhaps the passing of this measure might hinder reforms, the Hon'ble Sir William Vincent permitted himself to make the observation, I do not think he insisted upon it very much, I will not say he did it, but he just threw out a rejoinder, 'it is rather more likely that the attitude of Indian members towards this Bill that we have introduced and our failure to carry it or our postponement at your request, might hinder reforms.' Very well, now that puts before us a distinct issue. It is just possible that members of Government are led to press this thing on, among other reasons, also for the reason that it would perhaps facilitate the introduction of the Reforms Bill as early as possible into Parliament, that it would conciliate the strongly adverse English opinion and enable the Secretary of State to come to Parliament with a healing measure of reform. Now I must say, put in that way, the argument does appeal to me with considerable force. But it seems to me, and here the contrast between European and Indian opinions shines out in a most sinister light, it does appear to me that it is ominous that the Government of India should show so much anxiety to conciliate English opinion which is unjust and uncharitable, and so little to conciliate Indian opinion which feels very keenly, that they should be obliged to wait for the reform that has been promised so many years, while the measure of coercion comes so prompt, so heavily all too premature. Now what is the urgency and that is the point at which my argument must conclude after all? If the Government had come and said to us, there is this emergency that has arisen which we must cope with immediately or face very serious risks, I could understand it, but that is no part of the case of Government. The Bill is called an emergency Bill, but really there is no emergency which you are unable to meet. It is nominally an emergency measure, but really it is intended to cope with no emergency. The emergency is already coped with, the difficulty is already under, there is nothing that this Bill is especially intended for; the Defence of India Act is there and will be there for good many months yet. You are well armed to meet any difficulty of this kind; you cannot therefore come to us and say, if you do not do this now, the peace of India is in peril. The peace of India will not be in peril, and it is because we have the full assurance that we have given you the power and you have got the power to keep the situation well in hand for another twelve months or so, it is because we are fully assured of that, that we tell you the emergency has not arisen, you are not yet defenceless. Come to us at the right moment. In the meantime allay the alarm and ill-feeling aroused in the country. Your Excellency, let us not be misunderstood. Now and then in the heat of controversy a remark is thrown out, like that which, I think, unconsciously escaped from the Hon'ble Mr. Irouside, are we or are we not to show sympathy with anarchy? He said something of that kind. I do not believe it can be said that because a Member gets up here and asks that this Bill be postponed, or modified in some way, he necessarily shows sympathy with anarchists, or fails to show sympathy with the victims of anarchy. I think that is an unjust imputation which no Hon'ble Member of this Council would willingly make. I have no doubt whatever that now and then when we are swayed by that unhappy spirit of controversy these remarks do escape us, but when they are pointed out to us, I take it we should be charitable enough to give to others that which we should be only too ready to ask for ourselves."

4-23 P.M.

The Hon'ble Mr. K. V. Rangaswamy Ayyangar :—" My Lord, this afternoon your Excellency announced that the meeting of this Council will be continued after the Garden Party, that is, at 6 o'clock. By that we fear that the Government is bent upon hurrying up this measure. My Lord, there is absolutely no hurry for the Government to rush on with this Bill when they have the power to deal with such crimes until they receive the considered opinions of these select bodies recommended by Mr. Banerjee. Bills of minor importance are circulated and the opinions of even significant bodies are sent to us. It is quite just and legitimate that a Bill of such importance as the one under consideration, should be circulated for the opinions of all the High Courts and other bodies mentioned in my amendment, and their opinions should go to weigh with the Government to amend the Bill so as to render it acceptable to the people and make it conform to the traditional sanctity of British justice. I am not like a child crying for the postponement to the next day of a bitter pill that is sought to be administered to it to-day and which is eventually going to be a fait accompli, and so I do not at first resort to rule 32 of the rules for the conduct of business and put in a motion for re-committal or republication. I only want to place before the Government this suggestion that it should wait to arm itself with the considered opinions of these respectable bodies in order to win the confidence of the people. That the abrogation of the ordinary law is quite necessary to cope with the situation is yet to be proved. I gave my arguments when I opposed the Bill the first day of its introduction, and the Hon'ble Member who is in charge of the Bill has not yet convinced me that my argument was wrong. On the other hand, the considered opinion of the country is the same as mine. We see now scientists of rare abilities who do not generally dabble in politics put aside their test-tubes and go to protest against these Bills, Sanyasis who do not care for this world come back from their seclusion to protect the people from these Bills, and such sinless and saintly souls as Ghandi who believe in the soul force of the nation and in the foundations of justice and righteousness of the British nation come from their retreats to condemn these Bills in unmeasured terms. The Council is not the proper place to praise or condemn the passive resistance movement, and I will not be justified to utilise my position as a Member of this Council to trumpet forth my own causes and prejudices as two others have unjustly done.

"Lincolns and Clemenceaus may be shot in free countries, but nothing happens there, but in India even after the stray and isolated cases of crime

[12TH MARCH, 1919.]

[[Mr. K. V. Rangaswamy Ayyangar; The President; Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjea.]

due to excitement have passed away, the corpus of the whole nation is endangered and action is sought which, I venture to think, is bound to lead to the strangling of political life in this country notwithstanding the protestations to the contrary. The Bill is confined to anarchical and revolutionary crimes no doubt, but I dare say even a paper mill that manufactures paper for an extremist journal and the ink-maker will be connected with an anarchical outrage because they were responsible for the extremist organ

His Excellency the President :—“ Will the Hon'ble Member confine himself to the amendment, please”.

The Hon'ble Mr. K. V. Rangaswamy Ayyangar :—“ Yes, that is what I am doing.”

His Excellency the President :—“ No, not quite.”

Hon'ble Mr. K. V. Rangaswami Ayyangar :—“ Then I want this Council to consider the report of the Loreburn Committee in England, and in the meantime to postpone this Bill. A reading of the Report of the Loreburn Committee discloses the doubtful legality of some of the Acts passed by the Legislatures here, and the utmost that could be urged by Lord Islington on behalf of the India Office and the Government of India was that it would place the Legislatures in India in a very embarrassing position unless something was done and he wanted the abrogation of section 32 of the Government of India Act (1915) dealing with the right of British Indian subjects to sue the Secretary of State for wrongful acts.....

His Excellency the President :—“ Really, really Mr. Ayyangar I must ask you to confine yourself to discussing the amendment which Mr. Banerjea has put on the paper and not discuss the Loreburn Committee and other matters.”

The Hon'ble Mr. K. V. Rangaswamy Ayyangar :—“ Mr. Banerjea's amendment is for postponement of the Bill till it has been referred for local opinions, and my argument is that it may be postponed till the Council has considered the Loreburn Committee's report. I have an amendment similar to this, but I will confine myself to the point urged by Mr. Banerjea. In this country indignation is uppermost and I should have chosen to run away from the Council to the peaceful village where mutual suspicion does not exist, where love and compassion for humanity prevail, and where there is no fierce and unsympathetic opposition. Here in Council even a mild amendment like Mr. Banerjea's is opposed. But the stern fact that unless one is prepared to find a settlement in some other country or some other Government, one should not be prepared to dissociate himself from his civic duties in that Government, persuades me to stop here and only raise my feeble voice of protest that these Bills should not be introduced. As a Councillor with full acknowledgment of the courtesy and magnanimity of Government in summoning us here and the special consideration shown to us by extending our terms also, I beg to remind you of the axiom that when the cargo is too heavy the boat sinks.”

The Hon'ble Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjea :—“ My Lord, 4-31 P.M.
my first words on this occasion would be words of acknowledgment to the Hon'ble the Home Member for, if I may say so without impertinence, the conciliatory speech which he has made in this connection. He has not been able to meet us; he expresses his regret that it is impossible for the Government to accept the amendment which I have placed before this Council. My Lord, I have listened with the greatest attention, interest and respect to the arguments which have been adduced on the Government side, and I must say that I remain unconvinced. Let me take some of these arguments one by one.

“ One of the points that I urged was that the Bill, together with the Report of the Select Committee and all connected papers, should be sent to the Local Governments for their criticism. My Hon'ble friend's reply is that the officials of the Local Governments have been consulted in regard to the sum and substance of the Report of the Rowlatt Commission. I think that is what he said if I have understood him rightly. But, my Lord, it is one thing to discuss the paragraphs of the Report of the Rowlatt Commission, and a different matter to place the Bill before the Local Government and ask the opinion of the Local Government on the provisions of that Bill. The two things stand upon a wholly different footing, and the one issue is not to be confounded with the other. An argument of that kind might be well for an advocate who has a bad case to support, but I hardly think it finds a proper place in the pleadings of a responsible minister of the Government of India advocating a great cause before the Legislative Assembly.

[Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjee.]

"Then, my Lord, my Hon'ble friend observed in connection with another part of my amendment, namely, that the Bill, together with the connected papers, should be referred to the public bodies, 'Public bodies are at liberty to submit their opinions'; my answer to that is were they asked to submit their opinions? They never were and my friend knows as well as I do that the ordinary procedure of the Government is to write to these public bodies to submit their opinions and to lay down a definite limit of time within which the opinion is to be submitted. Public bodies do not take the initiative in these matters; they do not unnecessarily thrust themselves upon the attention of the Government. Therefore, it was an omission on the part of the Government not to have consulted the public bodies, and my amendment seeks only to rectify that omission.

"In the third place, with reference to the point taken in my amendment, namely, that the Report of the Select Committee and the Bill and connected papers should be sent to the High Court, my Hon'ble friend observed that there were three Judges of the High Court on the Rowlatt Commission. There was Mr. Justice Rowlatt, a Judge of the King's Bench Division, there was Sir Basil Scott, Chief Justice of the Bombay High Court, and there was Mr. Justice Coomarswamy Sastri, officiating Judge of the Madras High Court. But, my Lord, there was not a single Calcutta High Court Judge there, and it is Bengal that was the province that was the most concerned in the matter and Bengal High Court Judges—I may mention my Hon'ble friend Sir Ashutosh Mookerji—have had the greatest experience and knowledge in dealing with these cases. Was it not right and proper that these Bills should have been laid before them for their opinion?

"Then, my Lord, the Rowlatt Commission reported, I think, it was about 18 months ago. Since then, the circumstances of the province have very considerably changed. And the whole of this Bill is based upon the recommendations of the Rowlatt Commission. Since the submission of this report the number of detenus has sensibly gone down. I think at the time it was about 1,200, the number is now less than 400, and you would not have let off these 800 men unless and until you were quite satisfied that there was no danger to be apprehended from their release. Therefore, from the action of the Government itself, I am entitled to hold that the situation has improved, changed very much for the better. Therefore, the circumstances under which the Report was submitted by the Rowlatt Commission do not exist at the present moment, and, if the circumstances are not the same as they were, say 18 months ago, is it right and proper, expedient, wise, statesmanlike, to legislate upon a situation which has now become more or less a matter of ancient history? I imagine, my Lord, that the law follows the lines of existing conditions and circumstances. They have changed according to the showing of the Government itself. That being so, it seems to me to be indefensible to frame a piece of legislation upon an ancient report, without more up-to-date light and guidance which might have been thrown upon it by the reports of the High Courts, of the Local Governments, of the public bodies. I think, my Lord, the position which I have taken up is absolutely unassailable. You are legislating upon a comparatively old Report. The circumstances have changed and, therefore, this legislation, based upon that old Report, is indefensible

[*Mr. M. N. Hogg ; Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjea ;
Sir William Vincent.*]

The Hon'ble Mr. M. N. Hogg :—"May I ask the Hon'ble Member to inform us of the date of the publication of this old Report?"

The Hon'ble Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjea :—"I said it was 18 months ago : I stand corrected if I am wrong."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—"The Report is dated April of last year ; it was actually published in June or July."

The Hon'ble Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjea :—"We will then take it that it is 12 months old."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—"Even that would be incorrect."

The Hon'ble Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjea :—"Only by a few days ; that makes no difference. The point is this, that within the last twelve months the situation has so quieted down, the position in Bengal has been so tranquillised, that the conditions under which that Report was made do not now exist, and any legislation based upon those conditions cannot be justified. That is the position which I take up, and I venture to submit that that position is unassailable.

"Now, my Lord, it has been suggested, I think, by my Hon'ble friend Mr. Fagan that we, the Members of this Imperial Legislative Council, represent the quintessence of universal wisdom that may be found in India. I am quite proud of that compliment ; I am sure all of us feel elated that such a compliment should have come to us from a representative of the Punjab. But, my Lord, though we may be, all of us, as wise as Solomon, the difficulty is this. Before we form our judgment upon any matter, come to a decision upon any subject, we must have materials placed before us to enable us to form a right judgment. What are the materials that are before us now in order that we may legislate upon this matter? The only materials that we have consist of the recommendations of the Rowlatt Commission. The other materials which would have enabled us to come to a more enlightened judgment, as I feel, would have been the opinions of the High Courts, the opinions of the Local Governments and public bodies. Thus, my Lord, we are reduced to this position that here we are called upon to legislate upon matters affecting the rights and liberties of a section of the community, to legislate under conditions which have excited the greatest apprehension and alarm ; we are called upon to perform this responsible duty without the necessary materials. Therefore, without the light and guidance that we need in the performance of so responsible and onerous an obligation, I think I may safely assert, my Lord, that by declining to accept my amendment, your Excellency's Government places us in a very difficult and embarrassing position. You may be convinced of the justice and necessity of this piece of legislation. We are not equally convinced, and we point to considerations which in our judgment make it desirable that the legislation should be postponed ; you are not willing to listen to us. My Lord, it has been said, and the question has been answered by one or two of my friends, that, if the Government were to accept my amendment and to postpone legislation till the autumn Session, that would be a sign of weakness, it would be really the acquiescence of Government in the clamour of public opinion. I cannot accept that view at all. A strong Government knows when and how to yield. The British Government is the strongest in the world. The Government of India modified the partition of Bengal after a period of nearly seven years because it was an unjust measure. The Government of India settled that unhappy controversy about the Cawnpore mosque by recalling its former orders. My Lord, to yield is the sign of strength when one knows when and how to yield. Nobody will regard your concession upon a matter of this kind, on an occasion like this, as a concession to popular clamour. It will be received with gratitude and enthusiasm, and

I feel convinced that, if your Excellency's Government accepts the amendment which I have the honour to move, much of the agitation and excitement which now prevail in the country will disappear. But, my Lord, if the Bill is passed this Session, I fear it will give rise to agitation, intense, universal, and, I fear, acrimonious, which will disturb the calm atmosphere which now prevails, and I cannot help thinking that it may even jeopardise the passage of the Reform Scheme through Parliament.

"The reactionaries in England will say 'India is now seething with excitement, with the spirit of conflict and controversy. Let us tranquillise, pacify India and then there will be time enough to think of the reform proposals.' Thus, my Lord, in the interests of the Reform Scheme, to which the credit of your Excellency's Government is pledged and to whose passage through Parliament we are all anxiously looking forward with interest and expectation—in the interest of those reform proposals—I appeal to your Excellency's Government to accept the golden mean which I have suggested and which is embodied in the amendment I have put before this Council. I do hope that the Government of India will reconsider the question in the light of the discussion that has taken place here in this Council Chamber. Indian opinion is absolutely united in regard to it; and if that is so, is it not wise and expedient to defer to it, accept that expression of Indian opinion and spread contentment and satisfaction throughout the land. The situation will be eased, the agitation will disappear, a calm atmosphere will be re-established throughout the length and breadth of the land. That is an achievement worthy of your Excellency and the great Government over which your Excellency presides."

The amendment was put, and the Council divided as follows :—

EXCESS PROFITS DUTY BILL.

The Hon'ble Sir James Meston:—"My Lord, I beg to present to the Council the Report of the Select Committee on the Bill to impose a duty on excess profits arising out of certain businesses." 4.58 P.M.

The Council then adjourned till 6 P.M.

CRIMINAL LAW (EMERGENCY POWERS) BILL— (Contd.)

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda:—"My Lord, I beg to withdraw my amendment— 6 P.M.

'That the Bill as amended by the Select Committee be republished and circulated for the opinion of, among others, the High Courts and Chief Courts.'

The motion was, by leave, withdrawn.

The Hon'ble Mr. G. S. Khaparde:—"My Lord, I move— 6.1 P.M.

'That the Bill be republished in the Gazette of India in English and in all the provincial gazettes in English and in the principal vernaculars of each province.'

The motion was put and negatived.

The Hon'ble Mr. K. V. Rangaswamy Ayyangar:—"My Lord, I beg to move my amendment, which runs as follows:—

'That the Bill as amended by the Select Committee including the minutes of the Hon'ble Messrs. Patel, Khaparde and Malaviya be referred to Local Governments, High Courts and public bodies, such as municipalities and district boards and such political bodies as the Government deems fit to consult for criticisms.'

The amendment consists of two parts, the more important part having been discussed the whole day and we had a remarkable success, unprecedented in the life of this Council. The second part was no doubt ruled out of order by the President and the amendments brought in by the Hon'ble Messrs. Patel, Khaparde and Shukul were overruled as they impeached the Select Committee's Report and mine aims at the inclusion of the minority's vote of dissent. Since it fortunately was not overruled by the President, I beg to move my amendment and to take the decision of the Council."

The motion was put and negatived.

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda:—"My Lord, I beg to move my amendment— 6.2 P.M.

'That the revised Bill be recommitted to the Select Committee with instructions to report to the Council during the next Simla Session.'

“ My Lord, the Council will see that this is a very simple amendment. It merely proposes to add two words at the end, and the Hon'ble Member's motion if amended accordingly will read as follows :—

‘ That the Report of the Select Committee on the Bill to make provision in special circumstances to supplement the ordinary criminal law and for the exercise of emergency powers by Government be taken into consideration this day 1921.’
